OBITUARIES

Daniel H. Ward

Funeral services for Daniel Hargett Ward, 77, beloved Morehead City resident and Sunday school teacher, known as "Uncle Dan," were held Sunday afternoon at First Methodist church, Morehead City. Mr. Ward died at his home at 804 Fisher st., Friday night. He had been ill for some time.

The Rev. Lester Tilley officiated at the service, assisted by the following ministers: the Rev. J. H. Bunn, the Rev. J. C. Griffin, the Rev. W. E. Anderson and the Rev. R. T. Willis, Jr.

The deceased is survived by one son and four daughters. They are Vincent Ward of Swansboro, Mrs. Gene Bowen, of Windsor, and Mrs. George Purifoy, Mrs. Mabel Wolfe and Mrs. James Willis, all of Morehead City.

Palbearers were I. E. Pittman, Henry Guthrie, C. K. Tolson, C. D. Webb, C. H. Freeman and D. D. Freeman. The members of "Uncle Dan's" Sunday school class at the First Methodist church were honorary palbearers.

Mr. Ward came to Morehead City from Swansboro 28 years ago. His wife, Betty Stanley Ward, died last year.

BIOLOGISTS

proportion of the shrimp production comes from inland waters and the South Carolina biologist-fishermen think that the shrimp migrate from North Carolina to South Carolina in the fall (so I am told) and that the N. C. fishermen catch most of them before they get to S. C. When does South Carolina plan to restrict their OUTSIDE shrimping "to allow the production of small fish to get back to normal?" This will be the acid test of their alleged altruism.

"I firmly believe," he goes on to say, "(on the basis of sound evidence that other biologists have assembled) that every commercial species in the sea exhibits a periodic fluctuation in numbers. These cycles are based upon the principal factors of food supply, enemies, and competition among themselves. I do not include man, as what little evidence we have indicates that in most cases the fishing activity of man is so insignificant (in comparison to natural influences) that it has no bearing on the population.

"Your article assumes that if the population of a species is going down, there is only one answer: overfishing. (I refer to a commercial species). In the first place, the fishermen don't know whether or not the population is declining. All they know . . . is that they are catching fewer. DOES THE FACT THAT THEY ARE CATCHING FEWER OF A SPECIES PROVE THAT THERE ARE FEWER OUT THERE? If there really are fewer there, does that prove that the fishermen are to blame?"

Could any assumption be more naive than the assumption that every fish the shrimp fishermen "destroy" would grow up into a mature, eating-size fish if the shrimp had not caught it? Or could it be that even as many as one in a thousand would reach maturity if he were not caught? Or if they all survived, how many of them would be caught by Virginia fishermen? Or any fishermen? The fishermen themselves have no conception of how big the sea is, how insignificant their activities are (in most cases) as compared to the forces operating in the sea that really control fish populations.

"Let us assume," he concludes, "in making one final point, that you sow an acre of carrots using seed of unknown germination percentage. The germination is good, and two weeks after they come up there is a carrot plant for each square centimeter. So, you go through your field and pull out carrot plants and throw them away until there is only one plant left in every nine square inches. If you had left them all, you would have gotten no eating-size carrots (food and competition); if you had removed only half as many as you did, your carrot crop would not have sold very well because they would all have been so small. If someone had come along and accused you of "destroying" carrots, which, if they had been allowed to reach maturity, would have fed 2,000 people, how seriously would you have taken that criticism?"

With Michigan-raised Eugene Roelofs, Ohioan Harold Humm, Louisianian Martin Burkenroad, New Yorker Herbert Prytherch, and Massachusetts-born Al Chestnut, (plus our native sons) all biologists and all residents of this area, a mere journalist "dissent" raise his voice on matters scientific. The defense rests. . . .

The lumber yield in Oregon during 1947 was sufficient to build more than 400,000 five room houses.

lofs, A. L. Chestnut and Carter Broad. Dr. Roelofs, Dr. Chestnut and Mr. Broad attended those of the American Society of Limnology and Oceanography and later went to Chesapeake Bay Laboratories at Solomons Island, Md., to study its facilities and exchange ideas. Dr. Humm gave a paper on an agar-bearing seaweed at the meeting of the Physiological Society.

Seeding depleted clams flats in Maine is the project undertaken jointly by government authorities and workers at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. Lumps of marsh sod are being placed on the flats to minimize the effects of tides and allow young clams to burrow.

Four million dollars has been allotted by the government for the study of water pollution; an additional five million has been voted to aid the states in making investigations and surveys to determine if, and why, their water supply is contaminated—either by domestic sewage or through factory waste.

To quote: "Under the law, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, in corporation with other Federal agencies, with State and interstate water pollution agencies, and with the municipalities involved, is authorized to make joint investigations and to prepare or adopt comprehensive programs for eliminating or reducing the pollution of the nation's water-courses."

Does this mean that our own problem could be considered, and perhaps solved, by experts and through Federal aid? It may be as our State Health officer has said, that we are unjustly named "the polio state." But what would be a better reason for looking into the matter? And, epidemics aside, doesn't a trip along our own waterfront at low tide furnish enough evidence that we may "have something" here—but not anything that forward-looking citizens and parents of young swimmers could possibly call desirable?

You ought to hear Doc Humm, the seaweed-sputter, hold forth on Newfoundland, where the stehery land rocky to the point of agricultural barrenness, the people of necessity frugal and self-sufficient as our early pioneers. He's going to tell members of the Morehead City Garden and Civic club about it, and document his talk with slides, on October 20.

Oystering goes into high gear this week, official sanction and all. Happy dredging, guys!

MISS MARTHA

meetings she would have the opportunity to tell some of her friends what groceries or supplies she needed during the week and they would order them for her.

"I got a telephone about six weeks ago," she commented happily, "and for the first time in years I've felt independent. If I wanted anything before I had the phone, I would simply have to wait for someone to come in or until I could go to church."

Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Eure see that Miss Martha gets to church and Sunday school each week. Others who are especially helpful to her are Mrs. John Johnson and Mrs. Lillian Duncan, she declared.

Last Christmas the Lions club of Morehead City gave her a radio, but more than merely listening to it, it serves as a clock and helps her especially in cooking.

Miss Martha spends a great deal of her time reading magazines in Braille. Braille books can be borrowed also from the Library of Congress, but writing for them and mailing them back requires the help of someone else and is not done very frequently.

Miss Martha's home is neat and clean, furnished very simply, and already she's making plans for planting flowers in next year's garden.

people who come here don't like the water, and this fact is retarding the development of the community, he charged.

"We need more money for health services," Dr. Ennett frankly told the Rotarians, "and we cannot expect to get it from the county."

Because the need is very general throughout the state, he said that the health officer is trying to get increased state aid for health departments in the amount of $120,000. He asked for local support for passage of state legislation to accomplish this.

The Carteret county health department now has an annual budget of $21,000, Dr. Ennett stated, of which $3,040 is received from the state. "We need an additional $10,000 from the state," he remarked. He said he had nothing but praise for the work of the county commissioners and could not expect any more money from the county.

Outlining the needs for additional nursing and health services to school children, Dr. Ennett answered the question of a Rotarian as to what services are now being rendered.

The nurses conduct examinations for minor diseases such as pediculosis (parasites in the hair), scabies (itch) and impetigo sores when school resumes after the summer and Christmas holidays. The health doctor and the nurses give the children medical examinations twice in their school lifetime, once in the first grade and once in the fourth grade. Unless a child in another grade is specifically referred to the health authorities for attention, this is the extent of public health service now available to school children, Dr. Ennett said.

What is especially needed is follow-up work by the nurses after therapy has been prescribed, declared the health officer.
