Cancer - Its Attack on Humanity

By J. W. R. Norton, M. D. State Health Officer (The writer of this article, Dr. Norton, will speak at the Carteret County Medical Society meeting Wednesday, Dec. 15, in Morehead City hospital.)

With one hundred thousand of North Carolina's eight hundred thousand citizens over forty years old sentenced to death by cancer, is it any wonder that this arch enemy of mankind has been made the object of a concentrated attack? More and more, the attention of doctors and laymen, alike, is being focused on the four degenerative diseases that are responsible for more than half the deaths that occur from all causes, each year. In this small group is cancer. For hundreds of years cancer has baffled medical science and struck terror to the hearts of men and women of all ages, especially those in middle and late life. We shall not, in this connection, discuss such diseases as heart ailments, apoplexy, and the others in the group above referred to, but confine ourselves to a recital of what North Carolina already is doing to detect and combat cancer.

To Set the Pattern In due time, all these deadly human ailments will become the objects of specific attacks by Public Health; but, just now, the guns are being turned on cancer, with a view to making the fight against this great killer a pattern for later attacks on the other degenerative diseases which are taking such a heavy toll of human life, and against which we have made little or no progress.

A comprehensive, concise, preliminary report of the work, so far, has just been compiled by Doctor Ivan M. Proctor, director of Cancer Control for the North Carolina Board of Health. We propose at this time to give you a summary of this informative and important memorandum.

On March 1, 1948, the Division of Cancer Control of the North Carolina State Board of Health was activated. Since then, three Cancer centers have been established and are operating smoothly. A Cancer center consists of a Detection clinic with a staff of four medical examiners, and a Diagnostic Management clinic with a staff of six specialists.

The first center was established in New Hanover county, at Wilmington, on April 27. The director is Dr. Donald B. Koonce. The second was opened in Buncombe county at Asheville on July 15, with Dr. E. D. Peasley as director. The third was opened in Forsyth county, at Winston-Salem, on July 21, with Dr. James F. Marshall as its director.

Each of the Detection clinics examines thirty to forty applicants in a two-hour period, one day each week. Any person who is found to have a suspicious lesion is referred to a staff of specialists. These specialists make a complete diagnosis and recommend modern and adequate treatment and management for the patient. The final diagnosis and recommendations are sent by letter to the patient's personal physician. Approximately 25 per cent of those examined in the Detection clinic are referred to the Diagnostic clinic.

Disposition of Patients No treatment is carried out in the clinic. All those who are found in need of treatment, whether for cancer or another ailment, are referred back to their family or personal physicians for treatment.

Who is admitted to the clinics for examination? This is a pertinent question. The answer is: Any citizen of North Carolina, without regard to race, color, creed or economic circumstances. For the sake of a speedy survey of a relatively large number of citizens most liable to have cancer, only men and women 40 years of age or older are admitted to the Detection clinics. There are some other 800,000 citizens in the State 40 years of age or older. One hundred thousand of these men and women are now doomed to die with cancer. Of course, the deaths will not necessarily take place within any given period, but that See CANCER Page 4
