SHRIMP

(Continued From Page One) spawns in deep water, possibly as far south as off the coast of Florida. The eggs sink to the bottom. After several hours they hatch. The young are known as nauplii and bear no resemblance to mature shrimp. They are microscopic in size and live a planktonic life, drifting about in the water with currents and tides. They are distributed north and inshore, probably by little understood currents. During the time of this migration they moult repeatedly, pass through three separate stages of body form, none of which resemble mature shrimp. By the time the larvae have reached the less salty waters of the bays, rivers and creeks, they are large enough and properly equipped to live on the bottom. They now bear a resemblance to mature shrimp and only minor changes in body form occur between postlarva and adult. The young shrimp sink to the bottom and adopt the adult mode of life. They grow rapidly, growth being accompanied by movements back toward deeper and more saline waters. It is during this migration that the fishery takes its toll of immature adults. As the shrimp mature, they move seaward and out of the range of the present commercial fishery. Little is known of the life of the other species; but since they are closely related to the green shrimp, it has been assumed that the life histories are similar.

Shrimp eat almost anything. During the early stages of their life cycle they feed by filtering minute organisms from the water. Later, when they have become bottom dwellers, they feed on worms, small molluscs, or almost anything they can find. In captivity shrimp have been observed to eat small fish or even other shrimp. In our laboratory we feed them on beef liver and oyster meats. In nature they ingest a considerable amount of mud and probably utilize some of the organic debris that litters the bottom.

Shrimp are a favorite food item of a great many fish, and natural enemies lurk on every hand. Although no figures are known, it is unreasonable to assume that men eat nearly as many shrimp as do fish. Ecologically, they furnish an important link in the food chain of the sea.

The present problems of the shrimp fishery are many. Although much has been accomplished toward clarifying these issues, science is not yet able to supply all the answers. Where do Atlan-

Four Delegates Return From Farm Bureau Session

Thomas Oglesby, Rufus Oglesby, Crab Point, Robert Laughton, Morehead City, and Oscar Salter, Bettie, returned Wednesday night from the national Farm Bureau convention at Atlantic City, N. J.

Discussed at the convention was the price support program, parity and acreage control.

Rufus Oglesby attended sessions on livestock, Mr. Laughton attended meetings on general crops and tobacco, and Mr. Salter, membership chairman of the county farm bureau, attended meetings on organization.

The delegates from Carteret county stayed at the Mayflower hotel. When asked if they had a good time at the convention, the reply was "We sure did!"

lic coast shrimp spawn? What do the developmental stages of the grooved shrimp look like, and where can they be found? How and when do shrimp larvae enter the sounds? How do they manage to stay there when the tide ebbs? How much food does a single shrimp require, and how many shrimp compete for the available food? Where are the favorite nursery grounds for the postlarvae? How many shrimp does a fish eat, and how many fish compete for the supply of shrimp? What happens to the small shrimp when fall comes? What happens to shrimp that is of paramount importance to the practical fisherman is: where do the shrimp go when they disappear from the sounds and other known grounds? Although it is generally assumed that shrimp migrate south in the winter months, considerable evidence supports the theory that shrimp may be found during the off season in the deeper water of the continental shelf. Whether they occur there in commercial quantities is not known.

The work of the Institute of Fisheries Research is devoted to the solution of problems of this nature. It can do this only with the full support of the fishing industry. The response of the fishing industry has been gratifying, and the cooperation which the individual fishermen and boat owners have given invaluable. Many of the fishermen have become collectors for the Institute and have heartily entered into its program of research. Progress is being made in many lines of investigation. The continued cooperation between science and industry will bear fruit. The fruit of this teamwork will be knowledge—knowledge essential to the intelligent exploitation of our marine resources.

Morehead City Girls Meet Second Defeat Boys' Team Trounces Alliance 53-13

Morehead's basketball clubs traveled to Alliance Friday night and the girls suffered their second straight defeat, boys winning by a wide margin of 40 points.

The girls played a rather slow first half with the Morehead team on the low end of an 11-8 score at the first quarter. At the half the score was 15 up and both teams were getting rather excited. Lena Willis, Morehead guard fouled out in the third quarter which ended in our favor, 24-21. This last quarter was really something. Morehead gained one point and Alliance gained six, making them the victor, 27-25.

Patty Jean Bell scored 13 points, followed by Elsie Willis and Nancy Derrickson who bagged 5 each. Jo Windell scored the remaining 2 points. Alliance really has a good forward, Paul No. 8, who scored 16 points. Second high was Ireland No. 3, with 5.

The boys played a fast-moving but slow scoring game as far as Alliance was concerned. They held up the low end of the score for the entire game but picked up in the last quarter to make more points than they had in the entire game.

Quarter scores were 9-1, 23-3, 34-6, 53-13, all for Morehead. We're certainly proud of our center, Buck Matthews who bagged 8 field goals and 2 free shots, totaling 18 points. Second was Leslie Feagle who scored 12; following was Steed, 9; Cordova, 5; Bob Matthews, 5; Bell, 2; Ray Lewis, 2. Top scorer for Alliance was Warren, No. 13, with 4 points, second was Boyd, No. 12, with 3.

So far this year, for eight games, the high scorer is Buck Matthews with 102 points. Right behind him is Leslie Feagle with 101 points. The balance of the points were made by the following: Tommy Cordova 44, Ray Lewis 43, Berl Lewis 34, Struggle Steed 27, Bobby Bell 21, Mickey Woolard 15, Bobby Matthews 13, Mitchell Burge 11, Larry Woolard 3, Charles Macy 2.

Our next game is January 4, at Jacksonville.
