Your Child Today

The Problem of Jealousy

By DAVID TAYLOR MARKE AP Education Writer

UNFAIR TO SITTERS... That's what you'll be called if you leave the dinner dishes for your baby-sitter to wash—and she won't come again.

Parents are becoming more and more aware that jealousy in children is often a very real problem. And not knowing what to do about it, many parents are worried. Perhaps they have one baby and are thinking of having another, or they have two children and may have noticed signs of jealousy in one or the other.

"You WILL run into jealousy," says Dr. Edmund Ziman, former psychiatrist at St. Elizabeths hospital, Washington, D. C., lecturer at the medical schools of George Washington University and Maryland University and presently associated with the William Alanson White Psychiatric Institute and the Washington - Baltimore Psychoanalytic Institute. "Whether you have two children or ten children, there will still be jealousy; and if you have only one child, you will still run into jealousy."

Dr. Ziman has just written a book, "Jealousy in Children: A Guide For Parents," (A.A. Wyn, New York). He says: "There will be jealousy, but the depth of jealous feeling will vary with each child. It will depend on his relationship to his parents, his preparation for the coming of a new baby, and his parents' attitudes toward him in general: whether they enjoy him and love him, or whether their affection depends on his good behavior. It will depend, too, on whether both parents understand the child's upsets and whether both agree on the approach to his problems. But while jealousy in children is almost completely unavoidable, it need not become a problem."

On the other hand, if jealousy is permitted to exist without being recognized, it can be very serious, he says. Educators, psychologists, psychoanalysis, and pediatricians now agree that where emotional problems are recognized early enough, and something is done about them, there will be fewer emotional difficulties later in life.

Jealousy which bothers adults is not quite the same as a child's jealousy, he says. In a child it is a perfectly normal reaction; usually it is an unconscious attitude or feeling which bothers him and makes him as uncomfortable as it does his parents. It is the poor handling, the mismanagement, of jealousy which causes trouble, not the feeling itself; it is the failure of the parents to recognize the existence of jealousy, or their downright suppression of it, that produces such unhappy results.

We can say that a child is jealous when he wants something someone else has. The child who is troubled has to find some way of showing it. A two-year-old, for example, may revert to his infantile habits of no toilet training. Or, he may strike his infant sister or pull her out of her crib, or worse.

But Dr. Ziman says he shouldn't be regarded with horror, as if his parents have suddenly discovered they were harboring a monster. They cannot get very far by punishing him because they have not reassured him that he has not lost their love. In fact punishment at such times will only help convince him that he has lost their love.

A little child needs to feel loved and needs to have this love demonstrated even more when there is a new baby. The reassurance that he belongs, that he is still very much loved, that he was and is a nice child, needs repetition over and over in both words and acts.

The location of the outlet where the electric iron cord plugs in may seem an unimportant detail to the man who wires the house. But to the woman who does the ironing, a convenient location for this particular outlet saves time and effort and makes for a better ironing job, say the home management specialists. For efficient work the cord should not drag or catch on the board, hamper the movements of the worker or pull across and thus wrinkle clothes being ironed.

The best place for the outlet is above and to the front of the board, the tests of hand ironing showed. The best height is 36 in. or more above the board. The most convenient position is on a wall faced by the worker; next best, on a wall to the side (right side for right-handed workers); least convenient, on the wall in back. An overhead outlet also makes for convenient ironing if it is within easy reach. But the specialists caution against using an ordinary light fixture on a drop card for an iron, this does not give proper heat and is likely to cause overheating of the wire.

The length of the cord also needs consideration when the outlet is placed above the board. Too long a cord will wrinkle garments

Cpl. W. F. Willis Serves With Air Force in Orient

A new arrival in the Orient to serve with the Far East Air Forces is Cpl. William F. Willis, son of Mr. and Mrs. George V. Willis of 501 Fisher St., Morehead City. Corporal Willis has been assigned to Far East Air Material command maintenance and supply depot for installation of the Air Force throughout the Far East, and largest base of its type west of Sacramento, Calif.

Corporal Willis had his first taste of military life with the U. S. Marines, having served with that branch of service from 1945 to 1948. While with that service, he was attached to the 22nd Marines, Sixth Marine Division, stationed at Tsingtao, China. He transferred to the Air Force in May of 1948.
