the message to the State police in Carteret county.

"The entire process," put in Officer Griffin, "takes about as much time as it did for Newsome to explain it."

It Pays Off

Just three weeks ago when shoplifters looted Morehead City stores and one made his get-away in a green car, Morehead police radioed New Bern to be on the lookout for the car. Sure enough, the New Bern police spotted it and placed the driver under arrest.

On other occasions when county officers are in the far-away parts of Carteret, Cedar Island, the Harlowe area, or westward to Swansboro, they can be reached almost instantly.

Officers Newsome and Griffin agree that since the installation of the radios, police routine in Morehead City has been revolutionized. Gone is the time-consuming necessity of the police car's return to the station for new orders. Gone is the reliance on telephone messages to the sheriff or his deputy.

"With these sets," said Griffin, "headquarters knows at all times where our two scout cars are and what they are doing. Likewise, policemen in the scout cars know at a moment's notice what is going on at headquarters and can go to the scene of trouble without first coming to the station for information or orders."

Station Licensed

In order to operate the police radio, the department obtained a license from the Interstate Commerce Commission in Washington, D. C. Each patrolman who monitors the station radio has to have a special license also from the ICC and must keep a record of every message sent by him.

"We have to comply," said Griffin, "with the same regulations about profanity and obscene language as commercial stations do."

The police force says it would be very convenient to be able to talk with State patrolmen in this area, but they also realize that if they could, there would be more interference in receiving messages.

Reception Good

Bad weather makes very little difference in radio reception. The voices always come through plain enough to be understood.

Each patrol car has special boosting batteries to enable it to broadcast as well as receive. Even the more powerful set in the station uses little electricity.

The three sets were purchased in April 1951 by the town board of commissioners at a cost of $1,401.
