The Latin classes of the high school met for their annual Roman banquet recently in the home economics rooms. Invitations written in Latin on scrolls were given two weeks in advance. All the guests dressed in Roman attire.

The head slave, Walter Fulcher, met the guests at the door and bade them enter, right foot first. Each was met by his personal slave, members of the first year Latin class, and conducted to a seat. The table was bare except for dishes of salt, flowers, and candles.

Margaret Hall, portraying the chief vestal virgin, greeted the guests in Latin and made sacrifices to the gods by burning meal. At the end of the first course the chief virgin introduced two guests, Cleopatra, Maxine McLohon and Penelope, Anne Garner.

Following the second course a group of slaves, led by Bernice Willis, sang in Latin Class. The food served was determined by research on Roman food and was prepared by the students. The first course, Justus, consisted of lettuce, shrimp, spring onions, eggs and olives. The second course, Cena, was chicken, beans, cabbage and bread. For the third course, Secunda Cena, sweet buns and raisins were served. After each course finger bowls and towels were used. Grape juice was served with all courses.

After the meal ended, a game using Latin words was played. The guests were dismissed by the chief vestal virgin, Miss Hall. The Latin students were assisted in planning the banquet by their teacher, Mrs. John Phillips.
