

County Agent Releases News Poultry Letter

County Agent R. M. Williams has released the following letter to poultry raisers written by Thomas B. Morris, Extension Poultry Specialist. Subject of the letter is "When Should Pullets be Housed?"

Ask twelve different poultry raisers when they house their pullets, and you will probably get a dozen different answers. Some will say pullets should be housed when they reach a certain age, while others say wait until they have developed good body size.

Then, there are those that say pullets should be housed when production starts; and some say when they are laying around 15 to 25 per cent. There are a few that wait until it is convenient.

Of course, there is usually the problem as to what to do with the old hens. If the hens are laying well, should they be kept until production slows down before selling them and making room for the pullets? With egg prices rising and the old hens laying large eggs, it is hard to sell them.

Some will tell you that if you move the old layers they will stop laying as they are just looking for an excuse to quit anyway. On the other hand, it is fair to the pullets to leave them on range until the old hens are sold? Perhaps the ideal time to house pullets is when they are well developed and a few days before the flock starts to lay.

Pullets should be housed as they start laying or by the time they are in 5 and not later than 10 per cent lay. Pullets will develop a routine or habit; and if this routine is broken, it may throw them into a partial molt. Bad habits such as laying on the floor are hard to break, and it can be costly. Therefore, it is a good practice to have the pullets housed by the time they start to lay.

If it is desirable to keep the old hens, they can be culled and moved to a shed or range shelters to make room for the pullets. If they are culled and moved carefully at night, they may be transferred without affecting production.

Ready-to-lay pullets are friendly and easy to handle if you treat them gently. Rough handling can injure and upset the birds so that production can be affected. Remember, pullets should be handled with care for they are the profit makers for the next twelve months.

September Reminders
1. Keep good records to show daily operations for improvements and to help correct mistakes. Demonstration flock records are wanted for comparison of breeds and strains. See your county or home agent for information and record forms.

2. Plan a grazing crop to raise your pullets on next spring. One test found that pullets raised on a good range had 10 per cent better livability and 5 per cent more eggs than those raised in confinement.

3. Be sure your pullets have plenty of feeding and watering space. Each one hundred birds should have four feeders six feet long and one five-foot automatic fountain or six to nine gallons of water daily.

4. Gather eggs often. Hold in a cool, moist room. Sell fresh eggs.

Michigan State Tests Textiles
East Lansing, Mich. (AP)—Fabrics advertised as crease-resistant actually do resist creases, Michigan State University textile researchers discovered.

The skeptical researchers put the fabrics through more than 25 launderings in an automatic washer with the water at a temperature of 140 degrees, using a synthetic detergent.

They found that although there was some loss of finish in the laundering, the treated fabrics remained crease-resistant throughout the study.

To make the test, both treated and untreated fabrics were purchased from retail stores. Fabrics tested included crease-resistant voiles, permanent crisp, powder puff muslins, crease-resistant novelty ginghams, iridescent chambrays, striped seersuckers and glazed moire, crease-resistant cottons.

Fabrics with the crease-resistant finishes cost 30 to 60 cents a yard more than those without the finish.
