Votes in Cattle Referendum Will Be Cast March 15

County farmers will go to the polls March 15 to vote for or against the cattle slaughter referendum. The cattle referendum, if passed, will be a self-assessment program for farmers raising cattle for slaughter.

The funds collected will be used to support a promotion program to encourage the production and consumption of beef in North Carolina. Under the set-up, buyers of cattle for slaughter would collect 10 cents per head on all slaughter cattle which sell for as much as $20 per head.

L. Y. Ballentine, North Carolina commissioner of agriculture says, "We have made great strides in beef production and consumption; but we live in a highly competitive world today and no industry can expect to move forward, or even hold its own, that does not aggressively promote the merchandising of its products."

"With funds derived from the assessment proposed in this referendum the N. C. Cattlemen's Association could do much to stimulate the interest of our farmers in cattle production and to increase the consumption of North Carolina beef."

"As a dairy farmer, I heartily endorse the association's move in this direction, and urge all producers of beef to go to the polls and vote their approval of a program that can advance their interests so much for so small an expenditure on the part of each individual."
