Institute Professors Report on Clam Growth

Results of studies on growth rates of young clams, conducted at the Institute of Fisheries Research, were recently published in the Proceedings of the National Shellfisheries, Volume 47, 1957. Dr. A. F. Chestnut, Dr. W. E. Fahy and H. J. Porter collaborated in the studies, which were continued for 18 months in Bogue Sound.

Four groups of clams were used which included the common hard clam (Venus mercenaria), the southern hard clam (V. campechiensis) and hybrids produced by crossing the two species. These clams were artificially reared in the laboratory at Milford, Conn., and planted in Bogue Sound.

Results showed that in months the common hard clams grew from an average length of one-quarter inch to about one inch. After 18 months, the hybrids were about one and one-half inches long and weighed twice as much as the common hard clams.

The southern hard clams (found in the ocean off North Carolina) died during the cold weather in Bogue Sound. The greatest growth occurred between April and August. From September through March, little or no growth took place.

These clams were raised from parents which were native to New England and Florida. Since both

Burglar Puts in Hard Night's Work for Loot

Columbus, Ohio (AP)—A burglar here really worked for his $37 loot, to all indications.

Police say he apparently squeezed through bars eight inches apart on the basement window of a tavern, removed a door panel to get upstairs, climbed into the attic, cut a hole in the ceiling of a room where the safe was, and dropped down.

They said he then tried to push the 500-pound safe to the tavern door, but gave up. He got the $37 from a cash register and crawled out through a rest room window.

Species are found in North Carolina waters, further studies are planned using native clams. Attempts are being made to spawn and rear young clams under laboratory conditions.
