The Eagle Eye is upon you!

By ROMELDA SHEPPARD

A member of the senior class writes fervently, lamenting the shortcomings of teachers and praising the few who meet the difficulties that often accompany the role of teachers.

"I can't go home," the teacher replied to suggestions from her class as to how to cure an ailment which she was suffering from. "Why, if I stayed home, we'd never finish our textbook; and we are already a few weeks behind."

That night I thanked God for her. I thanked Him for someone I thought was one of America's too-scarce, competent, devoted teachers.

In our library hangs a poster which reads: "Teaching—Do You Have What It Takes?" A sincere, thought-provoking message is in those words—a message which, sadly, did not reach many teachers before they began their teaching careers, and one, which, I'm afraid, will be and is being neglected by too many people who are either studying for a career in teaching or are planning to become teachers.

As my friends entered college, I counted five among them who were planning to major in teaching. All five had been excellent students in high school, popular, and had shared in various extracurricular activities with such vigor that one felt tired just watching them. They were all capable of adjusting to college life and adequately equipped both mentally and physically to successfully execute their college duties.

However, even with all of these fine attributes, only one of the five was justified, in my mind, in becoming a future teacher. Her reason for becoming a teacher was simply: "I want to be a good teacher. I like children, and I'd like nothing more than to teach them."

The other four had various reasons, all good for their own personal needs but appalling to one who knows that these people will someday teach his children. Don had wanted to become a doctor, but the lengthy educational period was frightening to him; therefore he had chosen teaching.

Joan was undecided as to what to study in college; and since a major in teaching had seemed convenient, it had become her choice.

Lee's folks were both teachers; and, although Lee was not particularly interested in teaching, she'd lived around teachers all of her life and had become so accustomed to the profession that it had seemed logical to her to become part of it.

Greg had been a football hero in school and had made up his mind that he'd be a coach or bust! Greg had a rather quick temper, one which I'm afraid could someday be detrimental to his students; but the security of a teaching career and the three-month's summer holiday appealed to him. "I won't be rich," he laughed, "but, at least, I'll always have a job—and that vacation!"

One out of five! Here, America, here are your future teachers. Look at them. Know them. Here are the sculptors of the minds of your youth. Within these people lies the heart of our nation. Ah, youth is the body, but the educators are the heart beat.

Here is our country's life insurance. Are you happy with it? Is it a good policy? Will it stand up when we need it? Where is the devoted school marm of yesterday? How many of these four will become the kind of teachers we need so desperately?

Perhaps the comparatively low wages are frightening away some of our potential good teachers. Perhaps the overcrowded, overcrowded schools, inadequate state educational funds, delinquency problems—I could go on—perhaps these are contributing factors as to why we don't have enough good teachers now, and why so many of our future teachers will be inadequately prepared for this vital job.

Look, America! Look at your present teachers. Because of the shortage of teachers, too many of them are teaching subjects for which they are not prepared.

English teachers teaching algebra, Spanish teachers teaching chemistry, history teachers teaching geometry! Cry, America! Cry not only for these teachers, cry for the students!

In too many cases these teachers don't come to school prepared to teach Joe or Jane chemistry, geometry, or algebra. Oh, they can teach their particular subjects (some of them quite well) but many of them can't face up to the challenge of having to expand their knowledge and enrich their teaching capabilities.

Others, already far too pressed with work (the general rule for teachers is that they are overworked), can't devote any more time to an extra subject which they did not ask to teach. And still others spend more time bluffing their way through a class period and pretending to teach than they would if they'd just read the next day's chapter and be prepared to make a feeble attempt at guiding to some degree the thirty or forty pupils so dependent upon them.

Through this disheartening realism, there does shine a ray of hope. Some teachers accept the challenge. These teachers are too few, and, in many cases, are the very ones who are already extremely overloaded with work.

These are the men and women who are the devoted educators. They realize that it is they who are responsible for molding good minds no matter how hard the job is, no matter what subject they teach, no matter what obstacles they must overcome, they throw themselves into their work.

They give their souls to the minds they are endeavoring to enlighten. They know their subjects, they are prepared to teach, they are willing to guide their students

Sgt. Paul Bray Discusses Role Of Military Police

T/Sgt. Paul D. Bray, in charge of the Morehead City-Atlantic Beach military police detachment, was guest speaker at the Morehead City Rotary Club meeting at the Rex Restaurant Thursday night. Sergeant Bray discussed the role of the MP in a civilian community.

The cooperation of local law enforcement officers with the MP's is a big factor in keeping service men out of trouble when they spend a weekend in this resort area, according to Sergeant Bray. He said that Marines, in general, felt that they got a fair deal when they came to Morehead City and the beach for entertainment.

The only visitor at the meeting was Allen Knott of Kinston, guest of Rotarian J. R. Sanders.

Civil Defense Officer Acquires Furnishings

Bill Moore, deputy director of Civil Defense, Atlantic Beach, announces that desks, chairs and filing cabinets have been obtained, through Civil Defense, for the police and Civil Defense offices in the new beach town hall.

The town hall will be the coordination center for all beach agencies in case of an emergency, Mr. Moore reports.

but not to spoon-feed them; they eat, breathe, and sleep teaching, knowing that they are the heart-beat of a nation.

They—yes, they, America, do shine brilliantly and are a ray of hope. Enlarge the ray. Make the glow blinding. If you are a teacher, now as never before realize your importance, accept it, assert yourself, don't be bogged down or depressed by the formidable hardships of present-day teaching.

If you are planning to become a teacher, take this article to heart. Don't become a teacher unless you are qualified, not just with brains, but with your heart. America, your hope is twofold—in your youth and in your teachers. You cannot hope to survive unless you are willing to supply your youth with the kind of teachers so urgently needed. Appreciate your devoted teachers. Thank God for them.
