Wilmington—Maintenance dredging got underway Wednesday at Avon on the Outer Banks in a four-way project which will end three months hence at Barden's Inlet at Lookout Bight, according to a report by Col. H. C. Rowland Jr., the Corps of Engineers district engineer.

Colonel Rowland's announcement said the Avon work, consisting of about 17,000 cubic yards of material to restore project channel depth of 6 feet, will be completed about July 15. From this point the dredge will move to Wallace Channel inside of Ocracoke Inlet to dredge an estimated 100,000 cubic yards to restore the normal 12-foot depth. This will take about 12 days to complete.

Third step in the work involves shoals in the 7-foot-deep waterway from Pamlico Sound to Beaufort Harbor and dredging in Atlantic's 7-foot channel and the 5-foot channel at Davis. Approximately 20 days will be required to move the estimated 125,000 cubic yards.

Final phase will restore project depth of 7 feet in the channel leading from Back Sound to Lookout Bight which is popularly known as Barden's Inlet. This job involves some 85,000 cubic yards and will require about a week to finish.

The work is under contract to the Norfolk Dredging Co. of Norfolk at $142,850. The Norfolk firm has assigned the work to the 16-inch dredge Charleston.

Colonel Rowland's report also pointed out that work has begun on the construction of a protective fender system on each side of the entrance through the rubble stone breakwater at Hatteras. This work is under contract to T. J. Crooks and E. W. Tate Construction Co. of Norfolk for $9,203. It will require about a month to complete.

One other project, he said, concerns the beginning of a continuing project to restore the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway to project depth of 12 feet. The Cottrell Contracting Co. of Norfolk is scheduled to begin dredging in the Neuse River—Newport River section on July 18 at an award of $116,580.

Other sections of the sheltered route will be dredged to project depths as funds become available. The firm will use the 12-inch dredge Marion to perform the work.
