

Daisy Due to Pass Off Cape, Bringing High Tides, Winds

Weather Bureau reports yesterday stated that Daisy, the hurricane which has been progressing northward since the beginning of the week, would pass off Cape Hatteras late yesterday.

Warnings of gale winds were run up from Morehead City to Cape Henry, Va., yesterday. Small craft from Georgia to New Jersey were warned to stay close to protected harbors, and large vessels in the line of the storm path were warned to exercise extreme caution.

Tides along the central Carolina coast were predicted to be 2 to 4 feet above normal, especially in Pamlico Sound. The worst floodings were expected at high tides in this area, 7:30 p.m. last night and 8:15 this morning.

The storm comes at full moon when tides, especially in the fall, are always higher than normal.

Moves Faster

Daisy had picked up momentum Wednesday and yesterday morning was traveling north northeast at 20 miles an hour. Her position yesterday noon was about 100 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras.

Storms are not totally predictable, and until the storm actually gets out to sea, past Hatteras, weather advisories always urge coastal residents to be alert to a possible change of direction inland.

Wind velocity, as the storm neared Carteret, was expected to be between 30 and 50 miles an hour on the coast.

According to the Beaufort scale of wind force, velocity 25 to 38 miles an hour is "strong". It puts "large branches in motion, whistling is heard in telegraph wires", and closer to the 38 velocity, whole trees are in motion and it's difficult to walk against the wind.

Gale winds are 39 to 54 miles an hour. They cause slight structural damage, such as shingles blown off and perhaps weak chimneys blown over, or branches broken from trees.

Bill Moore, Atlantic Beach police chief, said a few cottage owners had left the beach, but yesterday "most were staying to see what would happen".

Beach Prepares

The beach Civil Defense officials held an emergency meeting Tuesday night and mapped plans for action in case Daisy caused a lot of trouble.

Life lines have been taken in from the bathing beach, lifeguard stands, and other portable structures have been moved.

Chief Moore asks that sightseers not flock to the beach. Should there be any damage, no one will be admitted to the beach area unless his car has a CD decal identifying the driver of the car as a beach property owner.

Rather than impair shrimping, the storm seems to have helped catches. Shrimpers made good hauls Wednesday and were working offshore yesterday.

Carolina Power and Light Co. as well as Carteret-Craven Electric had crews on standby in case Daisy caused power trouble.

Hurricane-wise families had stocked up on candles, matches, extra flashlight batteries and those with electric pumps had drawn extra supplies of water.

Cars were also filled with gas, a precaution against power failure making it impossible for gas stations, with their electric pumps, to dispense gas.

The sun came out yesterday morning for the first time in several days, but the occasional rays of sunshine did not fool weather-wise coastal dwellers. They were battenning their hatches for a blow.

Sent to Morehead City Hospital yesterday by Cherry Point Marine base was an emergency generator.

The generator was set up for use in case the regular source of power should fail during the storm.

R. M. Williams, county farm agent, reported yesterday that most of the tobacco in the county has been harvested and little was left in the fields to be damaged by high winds.

Crops that might suffer in a heavy storm, he added, were corn, sweet potatoes, soybeans, peanuts, as well as home gardens.

Glenn Adair, Red Cross disaster chairman for the county, advised persons to plan to take care of themselves during a hurricane and not depend on public shelters.

This means that families should have food on hand that does not need cooking, as well as medicines and other supplies so that trips need not be made to the drug store at the height of a storm.

Mr. Adair says that schools will not be used in case of a bad storm. When the power goes off, water cannot be pumped and sanitary facilities are useless. Drinking water, of course, is not available in the schools then, either.

In case Atlantic Beach and Salter Path have to be evacuated, evacuees will use the Morehead City Municipal building, where Mrs. Leonard Lewis, public health nurse, will be in charge.

Evacuees are urged, however, to bring their own sandwiches, beverages, and blankets to help ease the problem of caring for a large number of persons in a limited area.

Mr. Adair says that if the following steps are taken, coastal residents can minimize the loss of life and property:

1. Read newspapers and listen to radios for official Weather Bureau hurricane reports.
2. Store garden furniture, tools, awnings, garbage and rubbish cans, and other loose objects in a safe place. Such items could become lethal weapons in a storm.
3. Board up windows and put storm shutters into place.
4. If you are told to evacuate, don't delay. Just get out and follow instructions — a minute could save your life.

5. Don't run the risk of being marooned. Get away and stay away from low-lying land, beaches or other places likely to be swept by high winds and tides.

6. Don't go outside during the storm. Stay indoors, preferably in a brick or concrete building.

7. Stay away from windows.

8. If the center or "eye" of the storm passes directly overhead, there will be a deceptive lull, lasting for as long as 30 minutes. Stay where you are during this calm period. The wind will return from the opposite direction — perhaps with greater force.

9. Fill bathtub, bottles and cooking utensils with water. Keep extra food (which does not require cooking) handy. Be sure to have a flashlight or candles handy to use in the event of power failure.

10. Don't touch fallen wires. Report such damage to police or power companies.

Mr. Adair said one death-dealing tropical storm struck the US last year — Audrey.

Audrey, roared out of the Gulf of Mexico June 27, across Louisiana, leaving 371 known dead. A total of 23,788 houses were damaged and 1,316 destroyed.

On this operation the Red Cross spent $2,694,143 to provide mass care to 70,000 persons and long-term assistance to 3,343 families.

School
3. Areas such as shops (noisy) and laboratories are readily isolated.

4. Greater dispersal of sanitary facilities.

5. Decentralization of units minimizes fire damage.

Efficiency
1. Provides more opportunity for a flexible education program and is adaptable to any type curriculum.

2. Administration and control of areas to be used by the public (such as auditorium and gymnasium) can be achieved more economically.

Meeting Needs of Youth
1. Stimulates informal educational processes.

2. Eliminates regimentation necessary in large buildings with extended corridors, thus reducing disciplinary problems in corridors.

3. Stimulates individual and small-group initiative by entrusting individuals and small groups with greater responsibilities.

Architectural Character
1. Uses advantages of the outdoors more efficiently in creating outdoor activity areas (space for outdoor activities, games, physical education, nature study). Create pleasant vistas between and beyond individual building units.

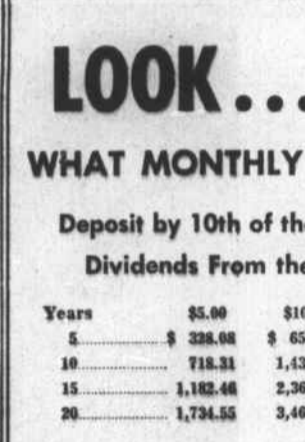

2. Permits better use of the site and results in more orderly relationship of units annexed in the future.

3. Assures elimination of "monumentality" inherent in single massive structure.
