

Senator Hamilton said he is in favor of the Humber bill, which amends the constitution to increase the number of senators to 60, provides for the allocation of 50 seats to districts on the basis of related geographical, population and area interests, and for allocation of 10 senators to the 10 districts having session of the legislature may be called if the redistricting problems can't be resolved. Senator Hamilton said that he had little faith that a special session would solve redistricting problems that have proved unsolvable over the past five months.

The hassle, basically, is over large populous counties getting more senators, which they want, as opposed to the smaller counties thereby having proportionately less representation, which the little counties don't want.

The state constitution, however, requires reapportionment, a mandate that legislatures have consistently ignored.

> When the Olds got to the police station, instead of stopping, it shot across the Salter Path road and into a dead end street that leads to Bogue Sound.

Officer Whitley took out after the Olds, as did Chief Moore and officer Robert Rowe who had been in the police station. When the Olds came to the end of the street, the two youths jumped out. Harrell took the rifle, threw it in the channel, then jumped in and swam to the other side.

Phillips ran into officer Rowe. Chief Moore called across to Harrell that he might as well swim back, that he'd have to sooner or later. Harrell did, then triumphantly informed the chief, "But you and at Branch's bought a $23.73 won't get the rifle."
