NC State Library Available To All

by Mrs. Felix Palmer

"People in this area use the State Library resources often without being aware of it," stated Mrs. Felix Palmer, Librarian. The Nantahala Regional Library borrowed a number of books from the State Library, last year for people in this area through inter-library loan.

Films used here by community groups are from the Adult Film Project financed by the State Library Mrs. Mabel Rayburn, Mrs.

Burley Deweese and Mrs. Bunch Nugent of our staff attended a training workshop sponsored by the State Library in Asheville recently.

New books bought by the local library are ordered and processed at the State Library. This means larger discounts on the cost of the books and saves the time of staff here to serve the public better.

The Nantahala Regional Library receives State Aid and Federal Aid for library services. During the past five years this library received a total of $65,530.32 in State aid and $33,255.00 in Federal Aid, both of these funds are administered by the State Library.

Consultants from the State Library visit the library regularly. They keep up with the latest developments in the library field and advise the librarian and members of the library board on problems of all kinds.

Blind people here receive free "Talking Books" from the State Library. The Talking Books are special phonograph records made by actors and other prominent people with good voices who volunteer their services. The Bible, the Readers Digest magazine and all kinds of books are available.

The State Library, reorganized in July 1956 by a merger of the Library Commission and the old State Library, has so increased its services that books and personnel are crowded beyond the point of efficiency. It operates with two other agencies in a building designed for the Supreme Court. Various study commissions have recommended that a functional library building be constructed and that present space be converted to state offices. The legislature has approved the recommendation by including a proposed building, to be shared with the Department of Archives and History, in the state bond election on November 7.

Vote: "FOR" X Archives and History and State Library Building.

Marathon Run Starts In Murphy

Chapel Hill - "I'd walk a mile for a vote."

Paraphrasing an ancient North Carolina slogan, 700 college boys and girls intend to walk one mile each -- to go from one end of North Carolina to the other. The race was run this week.

The "Torch for Education Marathon" was run, day and night, for 70 consecutive hours from October 31 to November 3 -- from the mountains and from the sea. The distance covered was 700 miles.

Two teams started, one here in Murphy, the other from Wilmington. They will finish at Raleigh on Nov. 3.

The marathon is designed to dramatize the needs of colleges in North Carolina for capital improvements included in the $61.5 million bond election to be held in North Carolina Nov. 7.

It is a cooperative collegiate stunt, approved by the student government council of the 12-state-supported institutions of higher learning in North Carolina.
