Mrs. Pansy Bradshaw, president, presided over the business session. Christmas cards had been received from a nurse in India that is sponsored by the Guild, and also from our adopted Korean child. Plans were made for Christmas Cheer baskets.

Food For Fallout Shelters

Special to Scout

by Mrs. Paul Hill

Every family should either build up and keep a two-week supply of regular food in the home at all times or assemble and maintain a special two-week stockpile of survival foods in the fallout shelter or home.

Stockpile foods should be in cans, jars, or tightly sealed paper containers. Select foods that will last for months without refrigeration and can be eaten with little or no cooking.

Take into consideration the needs and preferences of family members: Familiar foods are likely to be more acceptable in times of stress.

Whenever possible, choose cans and jars in sizes that will fill your needs for only one meal. This is especially desirable for meat, poultry, fish, vegetables, evaporated milk, and other foods that deteriorate rapidly after a container is opened.

If your home freezer is located in your basement or where you would have safe access to it after attack, you might count foods in it as some of your reserve supply.

Food spoilage in a well-filled well insulated home freezer does not begin until several days after power goes off. The length of the period before beginning of spoilage depends on the capacity of the freezer. If the capacity is 4 cubic feet, the period is 3 days; if 12 to 26 cubic feet, 5 days.

Storing and Replacing Foods

If you have prepared a fallout shelter, keep your reserve food supply there. If you have no shelter, keep it in that part of your basement where you will be safest in case of attack.

To maintain the eating quality of your reserve food supply, keep canned foods in a dry place, where the temperature is fairly cool--preferably not above 70° F and not below freezing.

Protect food in paper boxes from rodents and insects by storing boxes in tightly closed cans or other metal containers; leave the foods in their original boxes. Keeping these foods in metal containers also extends the length of time they can be stored.

As time approaches for the replacement of particular food items, it is a good idea to use the food in family meals. As food items are used, replace them in the stockpile with fresh supplies. When you put in fresh supplies; put them at the back of the stockpile; keep older supplies in front.
