necessary roads. It is hoped that Congress will provide these funds during the next fiscal year.

Construction on the camping area will begin this summer, Mr. Hanlon said. However the camp will not be available for use until next year.

Mr. Hanlon and Mr. Bylsma told the group that they along with local Forest Service personnel have spent three days in the last three months looking for a suitable camp site on Hiwassee Lake.

It was hoped that an area in the Grape Creek section could be found, one official said. The chambers Creek site was selected when no suitable site was found near Grape Creek.

The Forest Service plans to build 15 to 20 camping units this year, with plans to add more depending on the amount the area will support. Each will consist of a 8x20 parking space and camping area. Camp sites are provided with purified running water, "digestion pit", toilets, and garbage cans.

The camp sites can be used for periods of two weeks. As pressure builds up, this may have to be cut down to one week.

Mr. Hanlon explained to the Chamber that while the Forest Service does control 95% of the shoreline on Hiwassee Lake, it is only a narrow strip in most places. This makes it difficult to build suitable camp sites and makes the idea of opening lakeside property for the construction of homes infeasible, he added.

"I sincerely think in the long run Hiwassee Lake will be more valuable to Murphy if the shoreline remains in private ownership," Hanson said. "It takes an act of Congress to turn Forest Service land over to private interest."

"The picture looks brighter for new recreational facilities to be built in this area. Money is being appropriated by Congress for the first time to be used in the recreational field," he said.

"For the last five years most of the money was used to bring existing facilities started in the CCC days up to standard," Hanlon added. "The big swing now is to recreation."

The camps at Chamber's Creek is part of a five year program that also includes the Jack Rabbit Mountain camp site on Lake Chatuga.

Mr. Hanlon predicted that the lake would become clustered if turned over to private interest. He added that Fontana Lake and Hiwassee Lake are unique in that the Forest Service controls 95% or more of the shoreline on each lake.

He gave the impression that the Forest Service plans to hold on to every foot of the shoreline that they now control.

Mr. Hanlon closed by saying that "The Forest Service will give high consideration to Hiwassee Lake as far as finances are concerned."

If someone says, The Red Cross refused to replace losses caused by a disaster.

Answer: This may be entirely true. Red Cross aid is given on the basis of need, not loss. It is not a substitute for insurance, and it is not given to those who have funds for financing their own recovery without hardship. However, families whose resources are inadequate receive Red Cross assistance. Those whose property has been destroyed or damaged by disaster are assisted in rebuilding homes and farm buildings and in replacing furnishings and equipment. In many cases the Red Cross accepts responsibility for long-term medical and nursing care for those who have been injured. Red Cross aid is also available to small businesses owned and operated by individual families who are dependent upon them for family living. In determining the best recovery plan for families, the Red Cross is assisted by a local advisory committee made up of representative citizens.

If someone says, Red Cross won't help disaster victims who have jobs or won their homes.

Answer: Employment or the ownership of property does not prevent the Red Cross from assisting an applicant. If meeting his disaster-caused needs without aid would work undue hardship on the individual or family, the Red Cross provides assistance. It is important to emphasize that each case require careful consideration and is decided on its merits.

If someone asks? Does Red Cross disaster service duplicate government aid?

Answer: No. The government and the Red Cross have separate functions in disaster relief--and each pays its own way. This is not to say that Red Cross does the whole disaster job. It cooperates with government and also with private agencies, many of which work side by side with Red Cross and give substantial assistance, especially in the period following the first shock of disaster. Government has basic responsibility for the protection of life and property and for the restoration of public property, such as schools, roads, bridges, and water and sewerage systems. Government appropriates funds for these purposes and NOT for Red Cross services. The Red Cross deals with people and their individual needs. It is responsible for meeting the emergency needs of disaster victims and assisting in the long-term recovery of affected families. The Red Cross does not receive funds from federal, state, or local governments for its disaster program. Nor does Public Law 875, legislation covering federal assistance to state and local governments in major disaster areas, duplicate Red Cross responsibilities.
