About Inventions

If ignorance is bliss, then I have just had mine blistered. Occasionally I get a few letters from folks who read this mess and that is what happened a few weeks back after my column about the telephone.

Most of those letters were from youngsters. If my memory serves me correctly I am pretty sure I cautioned you grown folks a long time ago about letting your chillun read such stuff as this. But I see now you didn't pay any attention to me. I hope after this you will listen at me when I give you such good advice.

In the story that stirred up all the youngsters I had given a Mr. Marconi credit for inventing the telephone and I let Robert Fulton invent the cotton gin. Well, all the letters were in agreement about my not knowing what I was talking about. They claim that a fellow named Bell did the phone and somebody like Whitney figured out the cotton gin. Then they all told me what Marconi and Fulton invented. I won't say what these youngsters told me they invented on account of I haven't had time to do any research on 'em and I see now that I had better make sure about things like that.

Now there were some very good letters among those I received. One I especially liked began "Dear Mr. Cuz." It was from a sweet little girl in the fifth grade and she was very lenient on me. Not once did she accuse me of being a dumb cluck.

But all the letters definitely were not from sweet little girls in the fifth grade. Some of them were from mean and ornery little boys. And I wonder if some of them didn't have help from Mama or Papa while they were composing their letters and telling me how stupid I am.

One of them asked how I ever managed to get so ignorant. All I can say is, it sure wasn't easy. And it has taken me a lot of years along with a lot of hard work to get where I am in it.

I would venture to say that my ignorance covers a wider variety of subjects than any Ph. D.'s knowledge does. That ought to afford me quite a distinction right there. I might also add that I am a self-made ignoramus which is probably a lot more than many of these letter writers can say for themselves.

However, in spite of all this disrespect shown me in these letters there was an encouraging note in them, too.

It was the fact that our youngsters are beginning to learn a little something and that speaks well for our educational system. Every once in a while I get kinda uneasy about that matter.

Most of the time I don't worry too much about things like that. I used to, though, a right smart. Then I decided that all my worrying wasn't helping these situations a bit. They usually all get worked out without benefit of my sage counsel.

However, when it begins to get close to election time I can't resist reading a lot about the different candidates. That is when I get worried all over again on account of all the things getting pointed out that are in such terrible shape.

For instance, I was thinking we had pretty good roads, that is, until right here lately. Now I have found out that we just don't hardly have any fit to drive a wagon over. And our schools. Seems like every one of them is about to fall down all over the whole state. I'm pretty sure they will, too, unless one or the other of these fellows gets elected. After that everything'll be all right for several more years.

Then I read where somebody had misused some state funds. Now this is about the low downest thing a man in public office can possibly do besides peddling influence. But I'm glad to say that this doesn't happen but about once every four years --- close to election time. I reckon that's often enough.

What I have always wondered about is how it happens that the incumbents are always the crooks and those running for the offices they hold are the good guys --- according to the fellows doing all the running. I'll bet you have noticed that, too.

Wouldn't it be something if a candidate was to brag on his opponent and tell us how good and honest a man he was? And how efficient a job he had been doing or would do?

Then he could urge everyone to vote for his opponent on account of he had such sterling character and everything. I'll bet you anything the voters would be so shocked and surprised at such a campaign they would probably all go to the polls on election day and elect this guy with all that sterling character and those other good qualities. Then on the other hand... Well, anyway I'd like to see it tried once more.
