Fund Raising

14 Philanthropy Journal of North Carolina

Florida on-line

Florida's Secretary of State has put a database of the state's political campaigns on the World Wide Web. Go to : http://election.dos.state.fl.us/campfin/cfin db.htm

NOVEMBER 1996

Offsetting federal cuts Native Americans face funding challenges

In the wake of federal cutbacks, Native American tribes and organizations are looking to private grantmakers to help with funding needs.

BY ASHLEY PEAY

Of the 11,000 Cherokee Indians living on the Qualla boundary reservation in the mountains of western North Carolina, 68 percent live in poverty

And the poverty rate among the Cherokee is three times the rate among North Carolina's white population, according to a study by Teresa Sweeney of Duke University's Great Smokey Mountains Study Mental Health Project

FUND RAISING

And recent cutbacks in federal funding simply make it tougher to ease the poverty of Native Americans living in the state.

Last year, federal money to the national Indian Education Program was cut by $30 million, and the cutbacks have created a major challenge for tribes and organizations working with the government, says Greg Richardson of the state Commission of Indian Affairs in Raleigh.

In the past, Native American groups have received most of their financial assistance from the government, but now they are looking to private foundations for resources, he says.

Improving education for children is a focus of programs for which Native Americans are seeking funding. Photo by Elaine Westarp

Susie Jones, community development planner for the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians, says Native American organizations have a lot of work to do to be successful fundraisers. "When asking foundations to help fund projects, the major challenge is assessing the organization and overcoming a lack of knowledge about what these groups fund," says Jones who has written grant proposals for the Cherokee tribe for more than four years

Native American groups face the twin challenges of identifying possible funding sources and educating funders about Native American needs. And while less than 1 percent

Look for FUNDING, page 23

Signing off WUNC campaign nears end

By STEPHANIE GREER

Chapel Hill A capital campaign that began in 1987 for public radio station WUNC-FM is about to cross the finish line far short of its initial goal.

An anonymous gift of $300,000 to $400,000 will cap the 10-year effort and allow WUNC to build a new facility to house the station, says Bill Davis, the station's manager.

Construction is expected to begin in 1997 on a 7,500-square-foot facility that will cost an estimated $1.2 million. The new building will replace the station's cramped quarters in the basement of Swain Hall on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

After a successful grassroots cam-paign that generated small contribu-tions, the station found it tough to raise large leadership gifts, says Davis. As a result, the campaign in the past four to five years adopted a "low-key, low-visibility approach" that has taken it out of the limelight, he says

In fact, says Ron Strom, the campaign manager, the campaign has in the past five years consisted only of efforts by him, Davis and the development office at UNC-CH to solicit a

Internal matters Firm faces staff unrest

John Bennett, president and founder of Raleigh fundraising consultant Capital Consortium, is dealing with employee morale problems. Clients say they are satisfied with the firm's services ees and raised questions about the firm's internal operations.

BY TODD COHEN

Clients, employees and former employees say the firm does a good job of fundraising. But some say privately that the management style of John Bennett, Capital Consortium's founder and president, has created concerns about working conditions and their impact on clients.

The flurry of activity last month began with an overseas phone call to Bennett from Mary Moss, the director of development at Ravenscroft School in Raleigh. Moss had begun working half-time at Capital Consortium only a few days earlier and planned to sign a contract to head the firm's consult-ing division in the new position of director of campaigns.

But after less than a week on the job, Moss phoned Bennett in the Netherlands, where he was vacation-ing, to tell him she had decided to return full time to her job at Ravenscroft.

Moss says she told Bennett she the Capital had concluded Consortium job would require too much time away from her family. She declines to comment further. But Bennett says Moss also told him "there are some staff issues that need to be addressed, some morale problems and people feeling overworked."

Several days later, after interrupting his vacation and returning to Raleigh, Bennett met with Capital Consortium's staff to talk about their concerns. He says he also offered a month's severance pay and a reference letter to anyone who wanted to leave. Only two employees took the offer, both members of the support staff

Bennett says employee concerns included long hours and lack of full health benefits. He says employees are expected to work long hours because "we're there to service our clients.

And he says the firm's employee benefits package is generous.

"The company is stronger today than it ever has been," he says, refer-ring to revenues, client base and client satisfaction.

Bennett's staff agrees. Several days after the staff meeting, a letter signed by 13 staff was hand-delivered to the Philanthropy Journal. The letter, which a senior staff member says was written without Bennett's involvement, says the staff is "a satisfied staff and enjoy our work.

"It is understood at Capital Consortium that the client always comes first," the letter says. "Because we place the clients first it sometimes puts additional pressures on staff, often resulting in long work hours to complete the job. We recognized this

Look for UNREST, page 15

Smart Start hires development director

A new face

Gerry Cobb began work Oct. 7 as chief fundraiser for the North Carolina Partnership for Children the organization that coordinates Smart Start programs throughout the state

Cobb, a native of Fayetteville, had gram coordinator for The Asia says Cobb will be working with counbeen working as executive director of Foundation in San Francisco; an sel from Capital Consortium to raise account representative for Raleighthe American Council of Young $3.4 million in private money needed Political Leaders, an international based Capital Consortium Inc.; and a to secure future state funds for the porate level. exchange group that conducts study program consultant with Early program.

programs, conferences and seminars for rising political leaders from the U.S. and other countries.

A 1983 graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, she also has prior experience as a proChildhood Initiative in Raleigh.

State lawmakers last year imposed stricter fundraising requirements on Smart Start.

David Walker, executive director of the state Smart Start organization, Cobb says she's excited about the chance to work with the program.

'I've been hearing and reading about Smart Start ever since it started," she says. "The North Carolina Partnership has a lot of support. People see the need for the program and are willing to support it with private dollars - particularly on the cor-

Raleigh

Look for WUNC, page 23

BRIEFLY

State United Ways rank high in fundraising

North Carolina United Ways were among the national affiliates reporting the largest gains in fundraising last year. The United Way of Greater Greensboro - with an increase of 6.6 percent in fundraising - ranked 8th on a list of 10 United Ways reporting the largest percentage gains in the Metro 1 category. That category includes affiliates raising at least $9 million. In the Metro 2 category of affiliates raising $3 to $8 million, the United Way of Asheville/Buncombe ranked 8th in the nation, with a percentage increase of 7.4 percent over 1994-95. The Chronicle of Philanthropy surveyed 376 United Ways to come up with the rankings.

Food Lion founders give to seminary

Wilson and Evelyeen Smith of Salisbury - two founders of the Food Lion chain - have donated $1 million to The Lutheran Theological Southern Seminary in Columbia, S.C. The gift will help build and equip the Wilson L. Smith Family Village - a $2.5 million townhouse.

Elon College receives $3 million

Dalton McMichael, chairman of Mayo Yarns Inc. has given $3 million to Elon College. The funds will be used to help build a new library and science center at the college, which McMichael's grandchildren attend.

Duke honors family for giving

A memorial honoring the Duke family for major contributions to Duke University was unveiled in October. The memorial, located in the Memorial Chapel, lists Doris Duke - daughter of university founder James B. Duke - as its first honoree. The carving was funded by the Mary Duke Biddle Foundation.

Exploris museum goal reaches $6.6 million A $100,000 gift from the Duke Power Company Foundation has pushed the total for Exploris, a statewide global learning center in Raleigh, to $6.6 million. The center, which is slated to open in 1988, must raise $7.5 million by Dec. 31 in order to receive $12 million in county funding.