Played His First Role Too Well

Alan Baxter came out to Hollywood, following several Broadway stage successes, hoping for some character roles.

He was cast as a "bad egg" in "Public Enemy No. 1" and played the role to perfection. Result: he's gotten similar roles ever since.

Baxter's latest characterization is that of the questionable boy friend of pretty, blonde Mary Beth Hughes in "Free, Blonde and 21," the 20th Century-Fox film opening today at the Dolly Madison theatre. Lynn Bari, Joan Davis, Henry Wilcoxon and Robert Lowery are also among those featured.

MY MOTHER

"God sent her down from heaven above,
Filled with patience, unselfishness, love,
Always giving, not seeking return,
Never asking rewards she has earned.
My Mother,
She understands when I am feeling sad;
She's happy in my joy when I'm glad,
She will love me to the very end
Even when I have no other friend.
My Mother."
