For the Farmer's Wife

The farmer's wife of 1940 lives and looks extremely well—as you can see by these four versions of her new winter daytime costume! The models pictured here display these clothes, designed expressly for the woman who lives on a farm, in the Ford Motor pavilion's unique twelve-times-a-day fashion show in the New York World's Fair. In the show, eleven typical American women drivers chat with the audiences about their car and clothes, and the farmer's wife is a leading character.

In the upper left photo, Katherine Hall wears a dressy costume that will enhance her smartness at any afternoon tea. The simple brown crepe frock has a fishtail of pleats in back. It's worn with stunning costume jewels—a magnificent cluster-of-lilies pin and matching bracelet, both incrustated with yellow stones and rhinestones. With these the model wears a fashionable fan-pleated "pompadour" hat of felt.

Less formally but still strikingly attired is the farmer's wife in the center picture. This well-cut suit, worn here by Jean Parker, is made of brown fall silk. It has a narrow-but-comfortable wrap-around skirt. The bow on the lapel is a blue moonstone incrustated pin which matches the tiny hat. The feathers are ostrich.

Miss Hall is well dressed for shopping—or for any afternoon engagement—in the upper right photo. With the same brown crepe dress, she displays here a handsome natural skunk swagger coat and a red silk turban adorned with a pair of golden hands.

The practical and gay outfit shown below is a go-anywhere ensemble. It will keep the farmer's wife snug and smart-looking from dawn to dusk. The stylish jacket is made of civet cat—inexpensive. It's worn with a red silk dress with unpressed pleats in front and a big "halo" hat of red felt edged with velvet. This is Miss Parker again, and she's shown here applying her practicality to the problem of a birthday-present for the farmer. She's examining a new Ford tractor, and she's evidently impressed by its new features. This new machine, lightweight and very powerful, excels in power, economy, and maneuverability.

All of these clothes were provided for the Ford fashion show by Lord and Taylor, smart Fifth Avenue store.
