180 enjoy Chamber banquet

by Kern Geer

The Black Mountain-Swannanoa Chamber of Commerce held its 23rd annual Christmas banquet Monday night at Assembly Inn. One hundred eighty citizens celebrated the organization's contributions to the quality of life in the Swannanoa Valley.

During a social hour before dinner, guests looked at displays which included Townlift illustrations and historic photographs of the old railroad from Black Mountain to Mt. Mitchell, and the new "Welcome to Swannanoa" signs sitting in an arched window with the Montreat Christmas tree as a backdrop.

Traditional country wreaths and quilts and quiet fiddle music by J.C. Naves and the Musicians lent a sense of historic continuity to the events, as did such comments as "I remember when the library was just a little room above the firehouse" overlapping, "I don't know when Wendell Begley sleeps."

Hometown warmth continued through the banquet as Andy Andrews welcomed guests, installed the new Board of Directors and introduced the past year's president.

Awards were presented to several community leaders: to Carl Bartlett for special work in helping the Chamber obtain a new location; Bob Watts for leading the community in the Townlift Program (and also the Governor's Community of Excellence Award); George Venturella for overall participation in community and youth activities, especially the Sourwood Festival; Wendell Begley for service on the Economic Development Committee; President Bill White (who was not present) for service as Board president; Susan Garland for services with the small business people and for coordinating the Downtown Merchant's group; and Margaret Slagle for service on the board and participation in making Black Mountain an excellent community. A plaque was presented to Ed Weber for his service as manager of the Chamber of Commerce for 12 years. He was not present to accept it.

George and Linda Venturella were the first area family to receive the Great American Family Award for their outstanding contributions to the quality of local life. The Venturellas were selected for the award by the Jaycees.

Reports were given by the heads of Chamber committees.

Dr. Billy Graham and his wife Ruth attended the banquet. Dr. Graham spoke about his appreciation for the Swannanoa Valley and how much it means to him, and closed the meeting with a prayer.

United Way funds allocated

Buncombe County United Way allocations were approved Nov. 30 for 1983 by the United Way Board of Directors. They were announced this week by Karle R. Lehman, president.

The largest percentage increase went to the Buncombe County Rescue Squad. The $15,000 allocated to the Squad next year is a 50 percent increase over 1982.

Other agencies receiving large percentage increases were Caring for Children, an agency providing emergency shelter for abused and neglected children; Upstream Program, a volunteer program working with high risk mothers; and Irene Wortham Center, an intense program for retarded children and adults.

Funds collected during the current campaign will go to 36 service agencies. Two agencies receiving funds for the first time are Hospice of North Carolina, a statewide program giving technical assistance to local hospice programs, and Helpmate, a spouse abuse program.

Other Buncombe County agencies receiving funding are: American Red Cross, American Social Health, Arthritis Foundation, Asheville Day Nursery, Asheville Lion's Eye Clinic, Association for Retarded Citizens, Black Mountain Christmas Cheer Fund, Boy Scouts, Boy's Club, Buncombe County Heart Association, Children's Home Society, Consumer Credit Counseling, Epilepsy Association, Family Service Center, Florence Crittenton Services, Flynn Christian Fellowship Homes, Handi Skills, Hominy Valley Welfare Services, International Social Services, National Council on Aging, N.C. United Way, One Family Fire Fund, Pisgah Girl Scouts, Rape Crisis Center, Research Fund of N.C., Salvation Army, Swannanoa Community Council, United Health Services, WNC Cerebral Palsy, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A. and United Way of America.

Plan could reduce phone cost

Hearings are now under way by the North Carolina Utilities Commission on Southern Bell's plan to offer its customers additional choices in how they are billed for local telephone service. A public witness hearing was held in Asheville on Dec. 1 with full hearings beginning in Raleigh on Dec. 7.

Under Bell's proposal, called Local Measured Service, both residence and business customers would have the option of continuing with present flat-rate service at present rates or choosing one of several measured options. The measured options could mean savings of up to $5.05 a month for residence customers and $6.25 a month for business customers.

Local Measured Service would be available to customers served by the company's all-electronic equipment offices. At present Black Mountain subscribers are equipped, with Swannanoa subscribers presently scheduled for conversion within a few years.

The plan, if approved, could become effective in early 1983.

Bell has emphasized that the measured plans would be strictly optional. Customers who wish to stay with the flat rate would not need to initiate any action with the company.

Monthly bills for measured service customers would vary according to their ability or willingness to limit the use of the phone for outgoing calls. As with flat-rate service, all Southern Bell customers, including those on measured options, could receive an unlimited number of incoming calls at no additional charge.

"We believe our customers deserve a choice," said R.W. Fleming, Bell's district manager in Asheville. "Today, all customers pay the same price—a flat rate. Low-users help pay for high users. There's no opportunity for the low-use customer to save on the basic monthly rate. Measured service would offer customer choices they do not now have."

Fleming said that, according to the company's customer usage studies, nearly 50 percent of Bell's present customers could save money under Local Measured Service by sticking with their current usage. Others, he said, could save by voluntarily restricting their calling.

"We know Local Measured Service isn't for everyone," Fleming said, "and we intend to continue with flat-rate service for those who desire it. The important thing is that customers will have a choice."

Residence customers would have two measured service choices, standard plan priced 15 percent below the present flat rate, and a low-use plan priced 40 percent lower.

Black Mountain customers would pay $9.05 each month under the standard measured option as opposed to the current flat rate of $10.95. Those who choose the low-use plan would pay $6.30 each month. Those who decide to keep the flat rate would continue to pay $10.95.

Both plans have built-in allowances for usage. The standard plan allows for $6.20 in usage in Black Mountain. The low-use plan allows $2 usage. Customers can control their telephone bills by choosing when and how much they use the telephone for outgoing calls.

The cost of each chargeable call made during a billing period is subtracted from the allowance. If a customer uses all his monthly allowance, pricing from that point will be added to his bill.

During the first six months that measured service options are available, customers can switch to measured service and back to flat rate at no charge. This will give customers an opportunity to determine if measured service meets their needs.

Business customers could choose from a standard option or a tapered option which offers discounts for higher volume of calls. Both business measured options would be priced below the existing flat rate. Fleming said businesses that depend mainly on incoming calls could benefit greatly from measured service.

"Perhaps the most compelling reason for measured service is that, as local rates move toward their full cost in the fully competitive marketplace, many of our customers might otherwise find it difficult to continue with telephone service," Fleming said. "Today in North Carolina about 88 percent of our households have service. As the rate for flat-rate service goes up, many of these customers might be priced out of the market."

Mrs. McMahon receives leadership award

Mrs. Annie McMahon, recently selected Buncombe County Woman of the Year, was awarded a Certificate of Leadership Saturday for service to the WNC Community Development Program. The award was presented to Mrs. McMahon at the awards luncheon at the Inn on the Plaza by Jim Graham, N.C. Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mrs. McMahon was nominated by the Buckeye Cove Community Club for Woman of the Year. She was selected from 19 other entries for the county award. She received the award during Farm City Week Oct. 8 at the Asheville Mall from Ed Biddix Jr., county extension chairman.

Mrs. McMahon is president of Buckeye Cove Community Club, treasurer of the Swannanoa Community Council and nutrition chairman of the Swannanoa Valley Crafters. Her nomination states, "She has been the driving force behind the club members in the completion of the community center, and as a result we are 95 percent completed. She has also spearheaded the fund raisers, making them a success."

A native of Buckeye Cove, she is married to Latt McMahon. They have a son, David, vice president of the Dalton, Ga. Barrett Carpet Mills, and two grandchildren.

She has been a church hostess, Sunday School teacher and choir member for many years at the First Baptist Church. She was employed by Beacon Manufacturing.

Mrs. McMahon was also named Woman of the Year in 1980.
