Hospice Workshops To Resume

Lower Cape Fear Hospice continues its series of educational workshops in Shallotte with a session Thursday, April 18, from 10 a.m. until noon at Camp United Methodist Church in Shallotte.

The workshops are designed for anyone interested in learning about the program or becoming a Hospice volunteer. Such topics as the hospice concept, frustrations faced by patients and families, views on death and dying, basics of bedside care and funeral planning are covered.

Trained hospice volunteers spend several hours each week with terminally ill patients and their families, offering emotional support and helping with practical needs. Volunteers with professional skills provide patients and families with their help within areas of their expertise in such matters as nursing, legal and accounting matters, insurance, social work and clergy support.

These volunteers, according to a news release from Lower Cape Fear Hospice, enable terminally ill patients to spend as much of their remaining time as possible at home in comfort, and help the patient's family cope with the illness and subsequent death.

More information is available from Rev. Stan Smith, 754-4840; Gelene Russ, 754-6237; or Betty Harrelson, 754-6433.
