Workshops Will Explore Future Direction Of Land Use Policies

County residents will have a chance to help chart future directions for Brunswick County at a series of workshops scheduled in conjunction with revision of the county's land use

Updating of the plan is required every five years under the Coastal Area Management Act. The plan was most recently adopted in March 1981.

Sponsored by the county commissioners and county planning board, the sessions will be held in various communities across the county.

Citizens are invited to bring to the board members' attention "those problems and opportunities you envision for your county," according to a news release from the county.

Six local workshops are scheduled as follows:

·Leland Community Building, Leland, Tuesday, Nov. 19, 6:30 p.m.; ·Holden Beach Town Hall, Holden Beach, Thursday, Nov. 21, 7 p.m.;

 Waccamaw Elementary School, Ash, Friday, Nov. 22, 7 p.m.;

·Sea Traii Goli Links Clubnouse, Sunset Beach, Monday, Nov. 25, 6:30

. Town Creek Township Park Community Building, Winnabow, Tuesday, Nov. 26, 7 p.m.; ed to hear from organized groups in the county is scheduled for Friday, Nov. 29, at 6:30 p.m. in the public assembly building at the Brunswick County Government Center.

*CP&L Visitors' Center, Southport, Wednesday, Nov. 27, 6:30 p.m.

Members of the planning department staff will participate in the workshops, which will be conducted jointly by the sponsoring boards.

Only areas under the geographical jurisdiction of the county are affected by the plan. Most coastal municipalities adopt their own plan. Plans of some towns also include a one-mile extraterritorial zone

According to the N.C. Office of Coastal Management, through these plans, local residents take stock of their land and other natural resources, assess human needs and set goals for the wise use and protection of natural resources.

The plans set a blueprint for future development in the coastal area and guide local, state and federal actions that affect population growth, economic development and the natural environment.

In each plan, the local government analyzes present population and economic conditions as well as any constraints to development that exist in the community.

Based on this analysis, each plan

The local government makes the decisions-it decides how to classify land, what areas should be developed and how, and spells out how it intends to implement the plan.

Even though the plans are approved by the state and the Coastal Resources Commission (CRC), the state does not set local policies cr force local government to classify land in any specific way.

CRC guidelines identify issues for local government to address in their futures of the county. At the time of the 1981 plan, the U.S. Census Bureau reported a permanent resident county population of 55,777 as of April 1, 1989. April April 1, 1985, this population was projected to have grown to over 48,500.

A report prepared by the county planning department in conjunction with local towns showed a peak day tourist population of 140,000 on July 4,

Department of Natural Resources and Community Development has approved the town's application for funds to develop an oceantront access area at the end of Shallotte Boulevard. A proposal for a larger access estuarine access area at the waterway end of the boulevard was not funded.

The amount of the grant is to be announced and the funds are expected to be available in December from the N.C. Office of Coastal Management. As initially proposed, the town planned to install a stairway to the beach, parking spaces for about 20 vehicles, signs, trash receptacles and a barricade at the oceanfront site. The town will either need to obtain some land from the state, which owns the boulevard, or else obtain an easement. The proposal is subject to revi-
