Sedaka Headlines Azalea Show

Neil Sedaka, a singer, songwriter and pianist with broad age appeal, will perform in the show segment of the Azalea Festival Queen's Coronation and Show on April 9 in Wilmington.

Tickets are $20 each for the event scheduled at 8 p.m. in Trask Coliseum on the campus of UNC-Wilmington. Sedaka's performance will follow Gov. Jim Martin's crowning of Queen Azalea XXI, TV actress Kim Morgan Greene.

Sedaka, an alumnus of the Julliard School of Music, has earned a name with such hits songs as "Should've Never Let You Go," written with his daughter, Tara, and "Love Will Keep Us Together," with composer John Greenfield.

One of his most recent albums is "My Friend," recorded in 1986.

Other recent additions to the April 7-10 line-up for this 41st Azalea Festival include celebrity guests Charles Robinson and Kassie Wesley and singer Tracie Marie Broach.

Robinson is the popular laid-back night clerk "Mac" on NBC-TV's "Night Court." Wesley, who stars in the role of Chelsea Reardon on the CBS-TV daytime drama, "Guiding Light," will appear at the April 8 variety show, parade, Queen's garden party, and coronation pageant and show.

Tracie Broach, a 16-year-old singer and high school junior from Florence, S.C., will be the pre-show entertainer for the festival variety show on April 8, and will perform again on April 9 at the riverfront park stage in Wilmington from 3:05 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. She has provided opening act entertainment for comedian Jerry Clower three times in the past year.

Tickets for all paid-admission events, including the April 7 Tom Jones concert, are available from the festival office, Long Leag Mall, 763-0905.

BCC Opens New Classroom Building

Some students enrolled at Brunswick Community College this spring will learn in the comfort of a brand new facility.

College maintenance crews have started moving furniture and equipment into the institution's new $1.8 million classroom building, with administrators scheduled to move in later this month.

Although a few classes have already met in the new building, students will be officially introduced to the facility Friday, the first day of the spring quarter.

According to Anne Marie Schettini, BCC public information officer, labs set up in the new building will include cosmetology, practical nursing, electronics and word processing.

College maintenance crews were scheduled to move laboratory equipment from the college's Southport Annex this week and library materials next week.

Ms. Schettini said more general education classes will be held at Southport once space is made available.

While administrative offices will be temporarily housed in the new facility, the continuing education department will remain at the old Supply campus.

College administrators had originally hoped to hold winter quarter classes in the new facility, but experienced delays in receiving final approval from state building inspectors.

Interim President W. Michael Reaves said, "Needless to say, we are all very excited about it. The faculty, staff and students just can't wait to move in."

Two additional buildings are currently under construction at the main campus with completion of both expected within a year.

The Brunswick Interagency Program, which provides educational services for mentally and physically handicapped adults, should be moved in to its new $640,000 facility sometime this fall.

Also, work has started on the 40,000-square-foot A.L.S. building which will eventually house administrative offices, the new library and a student center.

This $2.9 million structure is being built by L.P. Cox Company of Sanford and should be finished before the spring quarter of 1989.

Reaves added that the planned $2.8 million auditorium should open sometime in early 1990. He said the state has approved schematic designs and the college should begin accepting bids this fall.
