

Governor's Commission Wants Coastal Region Map

Development of a map spotlighting the state's coastal regions and waterways is one of the goals of the Coastal Initiative Commission.

At its June 7 meeting the commission decided to produce the one-page map, which will also highlight marine centers and historical areas, during its June 7 meeting, said Edythe McKinney. It should be available sometime in September.

Information included on the map will be drawn, in part, from a questionnaire which was mailed to waterway users and local governments which asked them to identify travel routes, navigational aids needed and services available or needed along the waterway system.

The Commission also decided last week to work with various state commissions which have authority in environmental protection areas in evaluating existing regulations and recommending incentives to local governments to encourage greater resource protection.

Ms. McKinney said the Commission will work with the Marine Fisheries Commission, Coastal Resources Commission, Environmental Management Commission and others in reviewing the state's current approach to environmental protection.

The Coastal Initiative Commission, a 15-member board made up of representatives of citizen groups and marine research organizations, was appointed by Gov. Jim Martin last November. The commission also includes various public officials and the secretaries of the state departments of Administration, Commerce, Transportation, Human Resources and Natural Resources and Community Development.

Its three objectives are promotion and improvement of coastal waterways, stimulation of waterfront improvements in coastal communities and protection of the coastal environment.

Biker Takes The Prize

Eight-year-old John Marshall, son of John and Vicki Marshall of Brierwood Estates, Shallotte, recently received a $100 check from United Carolina Bank for riding 27 miles in an April 30 American Leukemia Society bike-a-thon, collecting $437.75 in pledges, more than any other participant. The $1,512.04 raised in the bike-a-thon will be donated in memory of Rebecca Russ, a local girl who died of leukemia. It will benefit 810 patients, as well as help fund $1.9 million in research grants. UCB County Executive Al Laughinghouse presented Marshall's check, which he'll use to buy a new bike.
