Surfer Tames Wave

Strong ocean breezes Sunday may have put some weekend fishing expeditions on the back burner, but the group of surfers and boogie boarders gathered at Holden Beach Fishing Pier didn't complain a bit. Pictured above, an unidentified surfer digs in and carves the face of a chest-high wave.

Lancaster Fund Balance Grows

Contributors have given more than $1,100 to the Richard Lancaster Hospital Fund, with a yard sale and several church offerings over the weekend expected to add to the total, according to friends of the hospitalized youth and his family. "We're looking for a lot more to come in," said Gayla Varnam.

"People are showing their love for them and they need that right now," she continued. "They need people to stand by them and to pray for them. He's just there, his condition hasn't changed. It's still in God's hands."

Fifteen-year-old Lancaster, whose condition is critical, has been in a coma in New Hanover Memorial Hospital since June 3, when he had an aneurysm in his brain.

His family has no hospitalization insurance and their expenses are mounting rapidly.

The fund has been set up at United Carolina Bank-Holden Beach Branch, P.O. Box 308, Shallotte, NC 28459.
