ums.

She didn't leave it behind to "quit and sit" in Brunswick County. Her talents grace the Lions Paw and Jones-Byrd clubhouses here, as she continues to be sought-after as a freelance designer. "Retirement," she states simply, "is for the birds."

The same is true for Al, a three-year member of the Brunswick Community College Board of Trustees. He chairs the board's Building Committee and is currently raising funds to renovate the college's buildings in Southport. He is eagerly anticipating completion of the 1,500-seat Odell Williamson Auditorium on the college's main campus at Supply. "You're going to see some first-class programs there; it's going to be something Brunswick County can be really proud of," he says, with his own pride in the project shining through.

Though their new lifestyle is hardly sedate, the Wootens now enjoy the flexibility to pick and choose their activities, leaving time for leisure activities like pottery, which both enjoy, taking lessons in Southport and Wilmington. Their home accommodates the new style perfectly. There is a combination office and second guest bedroom, with desk, computer and hide-a-bed. Their kitchen area includes a low "breakfast bar" area for work best inspired by a waterway view.
