LOAD MANAGEMENT:

A way to level out peak electric use

When your household and family members consume electricity at any given time, it is known as "load". And when we add up all the electric consumption from all our consumer-members at any given time, it determines the load factor for the whole system.

There comes a time every day when the system reaches its peak. That's when all of you, all at once, are using the most electricity. This, of course, is when it costs the most to provide that electricity. The way to help keep electric rates stable is to reduce this peak. It's what we call "load management".

There are ways that you can help:

1. Signing up for our load management program which let us control your electric water heater, central air conditioner, and electric heat strips during peak periods.
2. Shifting usage during our summer peak periods between 3 and 8 in the afternoon and evenings. It is very important for you to use your major appliances in the early morning or after 8 p.m.

If you have any questions about Load Management or you need more information about how you can help, just give Glenda Stanaland a call at the Shallotte Headquarters office, (919)754-4391 or 1-800-842-5871.
