

Go Fly A Kite At 3rd Annual 'Festival Fly-In'

They don't make 'em like they used to.

No more flimsy wooden struts that break on the first crash. No more delicate tissue paper shredding in the wind or dissolving in the rain. And no more tails of torn bedsheet tied on to prevent persistent pinwheeling.

No. They don't make kites like they used to. They make them better. With fiberglass and graphite and rip-stop nylon and double control lines that can make a stunt kite swoop and dive and climb and even loop the loop.

But don't let that stop you from bringing whatever kite you have (or can put together) to the third annual "Festival Fly-In" Saturday afternoon. Even if you don't have a kite, you can have fun watching as other kite enthusiasts demonstrate their flying skills.

Fly-In participants will gather at 2 p.m. near the festival stage to decide where to fly (depending on wind direction). If you arrive late, just look up until you find a blaze of color dancing in the sky. Then follow the strings to where the action is.

The nature of the day's competition will be decided on the basis of who shows up, said co-chairman John Knight. Awards will be given for the largest kite, the smallest kite, the highest-flying kite, the youngest flyer and the top stunt-kite acrobat.

In addition, several models of the latest high-tech kite designs will be displayed on the ground and in the air. Instruction will be available for those who want to bring a new kite and learn to fly it.

Both Knight and co-chairman Richard Jones plan to bring and demonstrate several kites from their collections.

"We're not really competitive, even though there will be ribbons awarded," said Jones. "We're just out to have fun. So come join us!"

Trojan Football Coach Named Marshal

Jim Brett, athletic director and head football coach at West Brunswick High School, will serve as marshal for the 1993 Festival By The Sea Parade Saturday morning.

"I'm looking forward to it," said Brett, who will make his 14th consecutive appearance in the state football playoffs this year.

"I did it once before in Tarboro for the Christmas parade," said Brett, head coach at Tarboro High for 18 years before he moved to Shallotte. "They said I didn't have to say a lot or do anything so I guess I can handle it."

The parade will begin at 10 a.m. and follow a familiar route, forming at Sea Trace subdivision and ending on the Holden Beach causeway at the foot of the Holden Beach Bridge.

The parade is expected to last approximately one hour. The Holden Beach causeway will be closed to traffic from approximately 9:30 a.m. until the last parade entry reaches the bridge.

"Last year we had between 50 and 60 entries," said parade coordinator Lionel Todd. "This year we expect to have at least that many again or more."

Marching bands from West Brunswick and the county's two other high schools will participate, along with the North Brunswick

High School Army JROTC cadets.

Other entries this year will include the popular Sudan Thunderbolts, a bevy of local beauty queens and plenty of floats and other entries from local businesses.

Brett coached West Brunswick to the state 2A high school football championship last December—the first state football title in the school's 20-year history.

Now in his second season at West Brunswick, Brett has the Trojans in the running for their first Waccamaw Conference championship in five years and another shot at a state title.

Sand Sculpting Contest Starts At Noon

Cartoon characters, animals, mermaids and castles...sculptors' imaginations set the only limits on creativity in the annual N.C. Festival By The Sea sand sculpting competition.

This year's event will again be held on the Holden Beach strand in front of the Campground By The Sea at the end of Ocean Boulevard West.

Sculptors can begin work any time after 12 noon Saturday, said William Williamson, with judging around 4 p.m., about an hour after low tide. There is no charge to enter, but teams should sign up at the campground store on arrival.

Top entries in each age division will receive ribbons, while three trophies will be awarded to the best overall entries.

Sand sculptures will be judged by campers at the campground who have no affiliation with the contest or any contestants. Judging is based mainly on originality, neatness and artistic design.

Since the age range of participants and number of entries varies from year to year, competition divisions won't be determined until after sculptors show up Saturday afternoon.

The popular event draws "some adults who are very accomplished," he said. "They do some marvelous things. The kids learn from that, too, but they don't have to compete with them."

Contestants are welcome to use buckets, shovels, rakes and other digging implements in fashioning their three-dimensional works, but no molds of any type may be used.

For more information on the sand sculpting, contact the campground at 842-6306.
