

Coast Guard To Simplify Vessel Documentation

The U.S. Coast Guard has announced the implementation of new vessel documentation rules that streamline procedures and remove needless regulations, a news release states.

According to the Coast Guard, the new rules that become effective Jan. 1, 1994, are "more user friendly and substantially eliminate unnecessary paperwork."

- The new procedures will:
- reduce required vessel procurement forms to two—the application itself and evidence of title;
 - eliminate 60,000-plus submissions of the MarAd citizenship declaration form presently required for some owners;
 - eliminate the currently required marking certificates that total more than 45,000 submissions; and
 - require only two copies of the preferred mortgage, as compared with the previously required four. Certain regulations have also been eliminated. Now, it will be possible to renew endorsements at any port of documentation and not just in the home port. Instead of being restricted to marking the vessel with the Coast Guard port of documentation or the owner's residence, the owner may choose from more than 190,000 places.

"The Coast Guard's new regulations result in a simpler application process," a spokesman said. "Therefore, inadvertent omissions will no longer automatically void the application; this will result in fewer rejections."

A new user fee will accompany the changes. The fee, required by statute, will be determined by the type of endorsement requested. No fee will be charged for renewal of endorsement.

COED VOLLEYBALL

Gene's Auto Leads Pack

Gene's Auto Body took over sole possession of first place in the Brunswick County Coed Volleyball League last week with a 15-10, 15-11, win over Brunswick Community College.
