Brunswick Hospital Recognizes 33 Volunteers

Thirty-three volunteers were honored April 28 by The Brunswick Hospital with a volunteer recognition luncheon at Haley's Restaurant in Calabash.

Volunteers received gifts and pins before an audience that included their guests, hospital administrators and other staff members.

The Brunswick Hospital Auxiliary has been active in both the hospital and the community throughout the past year, said hospital spokesman Daphne Yarbrough.

Proceeds from auxiliary bake sales and gift shop sales have enabled the group to support Lower Cape Fear Hospice, the Brunswick County Volunteer and Information Center and five area rescue squads. In addition members have arranged purchase of items for several hospital departments, including a cholesterol screening machine to be used at community events and walk-in clinics.

Auxiliary members contributed 6,504 hours of service to the hospital during the past year, the equivalent of three full-time employees, a service valued at more than $70,000. The group serves various hospital departments and helps in making patients and visitors comfortable.

Frances Warner serves as patient advocate and volunteer director for the hospital.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Williams Recognized For Safety Program

Bruce Williams, area specialized turfgrass agent and Brunswick Beacon columnist, recently received a statewide top-entry award from the N.C. Safety Council recognizing his contribution to safety in N.C.

WILLIAMS

He was presented a plaque during an awards luncheon at the McKimmon Center on the N.C. State University campus April 28.

Williams developed an eight-hour employee education program for golf course and landscape workers based on surveys of landscape managers and discussions with golf course superintendents from the Cape Fear Golf Course Superintendents Association. The course trains golf course and landscape maintenance workers to conduct daily maintenance chores more safely and efficiently. The program received nationwide recognition in the 1993 "Search for Excellence" program by the National Association of County Agricultural Agents.

Williams said, "I feel that it is paramount for a worker on the golf course to have a clear understanding of turfgrass management, equipment operation, pesticide application and other day-to-day operations. For golf courses participating in the program, I have seen the training improve employee productivity and well-being."
