10 Nominated For County '95 Teacher Of The Year

Brunswick County's 1995 Teacher of the Year will come from among 10 nominees chosen by fellow faculty members at their respective schools.

The 10 candidates—nine women and one man—were to be interviewed Wednesday, June 1, at Brunswick Community College by a panel that was to include a retired educator, a student, a past teacher of the year and one to three community representatives, said William Furless, project coordinator. The panel also had the opportunity to reviewed nomination packets that included educational and professional background, letters of recommendation and each nominee's philosophy of teaching.

United Carolina Bank is the sole sponsor of the Brunswick County Teacher of the Year competition, presenting each year's winner a $1,000 cash award.

Current Brunswick County Teacher of the Year May Moore was also honored by UCB at a luncheon Tuesday, May 31, in Southport. Moore teaches seventh grade math at South Brunswick Middle School and is mayor of the town of Caswell Beach.

Nominees for the next teacher of the year are as follows:

■ Diane M. Smyre, Supply Elementary, resource teacher, learning disabled and educable mentally handicapped, grades 1-4;

Turnout Light For Holden POA Meeting

BY DOUG RUTTER

Just about every time the Holden Beach Property Owners Association holds a meeting, the folks who arrive a few minutes late have to stand along the wall or sit on the floor.

That wasn't the case Saturday, when only 15 members showed up at town hall for the Memorial Day weekend meeting. There were more than enough seats for everyone.

"I'm disappointed. Where is everybody?" asked former president Bob Lineberger. "Maybe if we stir up enough controversy everybody will come to the meetings."

Lineberger, chairman of the Holden Beach POA's growth committee, may stir up some interest if the committee winds up recommending measures to limit growth and development on the island.

Lineberger said there are two major groups at Holden Beach. One wants to slow down development or stop it completely and the other is in favor of a central sewer system and widespread growth.

"Hopefully there's a friendly meeting ground between the two," Lineberger said during his report to the membership.

HBPOA director Andy Watson said the public needs to continuously discuss a sewer system to keep the idea alive. He said most town commissioners are not in favor of a sewer system.

"We need sewers at some point in time. If we don't discuss them it's going to cost us several million dollars more," Watson said.

Lineberger pointed out that only about half of the lots on Holden Beach have been developed. A sewer system would likely open more land up for development.

"I think our main concern was can you picture this beach with double the houses and population it has now?" Lineberger said.

In other business Saturday, Town Manager Gus Ulrich reported to members on the underground wiring project, sidewalk construction and the 1994-95 budget.

Ulrich also announced that the town plans to build a beach access ramp for handicapped people at Jordan Boulevard. The South Brunswick Islands Pilot Club recently donated a special wheel chair that can be used on the beach.

During the board of directors' meeting Saturday, HBPOA President Crawford Hart said directors discussed a possible amendment to the bylaws that would allow the association to operate under a fiscal year instead of calendar year. Annual dues would be payable each September instead of January.

"I think it'll make more sense. I don't think this business of trying to collect dues at Christmas time and New Year's makes a lot of sense," Hart said.

Property owners will elect directors at their annual meeting Labor Day weekend. Dave Gibson, a permanent resident, is chairing the nominating committee and anyone interested in serving should contact him.

Literacy Volunteers Trained

The Brunswick County Literacy Council certified 13 new volunteer tutors in May.

Susan Eggert and Joan Altman conducted the 10-hour phonics-based workshop held May 13 and 14 at the Literacy Council office in Supply. The tutors will work one-on-one with adults and teenagers throughout the county who want to improve their reading and writing skills.

Schools' Grant To Go Toward Reducing Earthquake Hazard

A $10,000 grant from the N.C. Division of Emergency Management will be used to reduce non-structural earthquake hazards at two Brunswick County schools.

According to Assistant Superintendent Bill Turner, measures will be taken at Union Elementary and Southport Primary schools to lessen the chance of damage by breakage or shaking during earthquakes.

At both schools, shatter-resistant safety film will be installed on numerous high-risk window panels. Hook-and-rug materials will be used to help secure equipment such as computers, keypads, typewriters and calculators. Restraining straps or brackets will be installed to secure window air conditioners, water heaters and other large items susceptible to falling.

The project is part of a pilot program initiated by the state division under the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program.

While earthquakes are not common in North Carolina, the state is susceptible to seismic activity. It could be significantly affected in an earthquake, according to a release from the N.C. Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

The U.S. Geological Survey has placed Brunswick County in the Charleston Seismic Zone. The most notable earthquake to occur in the Carolinas was the Charleston quake of 1886. Damage from the violent Aug. 31 tremors took many lives and made thousands in the city homeless.

Brunswick County Superintendent of Schools Ralph Johnston accepted a check Tuesday from Division Director Billy Ray Cameron.

As part of the pilot project, checks have been presented previously to schools in New Hanover, Buncombe, Clay and Swain counties.

Summer Hours In Effect At BCC

Brunswick Community College begins its summer operating schedule this week, closing on Fridays and extending other weekday hours until September, said public information officer Ann Marie Bellamy.

Campus offices will be open from 7:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

The summer schedule gives potential students who work more opportunity to meet with advisors, counselors and others, and also conserves air conditioning since buildings can be shut down for three consecutive days.

A rising senior, Rachel is enrolled in the health occupations program at West Brunswick High School.

She will attend Nursing Exploration Week July 17-22 at UNC-Chapel Hill, with the hospital scholarship covering tuition, lodging, materials and meals.

The exploration program is open to 10th, 11th and 12th grade students who are considering nursing as a career. It is sponsored by the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Nursing, the Department of Nursing at N.C. Central University in Durham, Glaxo, Inc., and Rex Hospital Corporation in Raleigh.

Enrollment is limited to 36 students. Applicants are chosen on the basis of the quality of a short mandatory essay, grade point average and statewide distribution.

Participants gain experience in many facets of health care. They visit real hospitals, touring emergency rooms, operating rooms, newborn nurseries, a wellness center and a variety of clinics. They are paired with nurses working with patients and high-tech equipment. Students also spend time in area schools of nursing and university campuses, meet with nursing students and faculty and tour other healthcare facilities. They also gain experience in blood pressure monitoring and injection preparation.
