

Ferry Is A 'Moving' Experience For Transportation

Many Brunswick County residents use it as a daily route to work; even greater numbers list it among "to do" items with visitors; and hundreds must simply find it the most convenient way of getting from point A to B.

However, the 30-minute ride on the Southport-Fort Fisher ferry has its own unique charm, aside from all these considerations. Board one of the double-decker boats at either dock and prepare to have your mind swept free of cobwebs as the spray of Cape Fear River water, the ballet of gulls swooping for morsels of bread and the sights along the picturesque river cast a happy spell.

The brief trip can be a history lesson; summer crossings will include college students who serve as guides to explain all the landmarks on land and water; it can be an eye-opener as to Brunswick County industry, as you glide past Carolina Power and Light and Archer Daniels Midland; it can simply underscore the beauty of fishing, one of mankind's oldest pursuits, as you encounter fishing boats along the way.

At either end of this trip—which costs $3 per car, $6 for vehicles over 20 feet long, $1 for a bicycle and 50 cents for a pedestrian—there are fascinating adventures available. Southport, a quaint fishing village and art enclave, has its own special history and beauty, and on its outskirts are historic Brunswicktown and the glorious Orton Plantation Gardens.

Fort Fisher, with its museum, craggy riverfront and North Carolina Aquarium, will please people of all ages. Picnicking is possible here, as well as on the grounds of Brunswicktown.

Whether a solitary experience or a family excursion, an entire day could easily be devoted to an exploration of Fort Fisher and Southport, and their environs, with a relaxing interlude provided by the Southport-Fort Fisher ferry, bridging the two historic attractions.
