

Brunswick Plant Sirens To Test At Low Volume

Carolina Power and Light will test alert notification sirens in the 10-mile area around its Brunswick nuclear plant on Thursday, July 21. The low-volume test will sound like a "growl" and will last only a few seconds, according to a company news release. Residents should not hear the test unless they are very close to a siren at test time. Low-volume tests are not intended to check siren volume but to make sure each siren works.

CP&L conducts silent siren tests every two weeks and "growl" tests at least every three months. A full-volume test is conducted annually. The rotating sirens are mounted on tall poles at 34 locations within 10 miles of the Brunswick plant.

The sounding of the sirens does not mean the public should evacuate. If an emergency occurred at the plant, the sirens would alert the public to listen to radio and television stations for information and instructions from the Emergency Broadcast System.

Questions about the tests may be directed to county or state emergency management agency offices, to CP&L's Brunswick Visitors Center or to any CP&L business office.
