Caswell Beach Lighthouse Featured On 12th Edition N.C. Waterfowl Stamp

The 12th edition of the North Carolina waterfowl stamp features a trio of buffleheads with the Oak Island Lighthouse at Caswell Beach in the background.

At 2.5 million candlepower, the lighthouse was created in 1958 and is the U.S. Coast Guard's newest reinforced concrete tower. It is the most brightly lit lighthouse in America and is second in brightness only to a lighthouse on the English Channel in France. The Oak Island tower's lights and parabolic mirrors allow the beacon to be seen more than 24 miles out to sea.

"This is the next to last of the lighthouse series of stamps," said Sidney Baynes, chief of the N.C. Wildlife Resources Commission's Division of Conservation Education and administrator of the stamp-print program. "The lighthouse series has been so popular with collectors that other states are now adding lighthouses to their prints."

Phillip Crowe, the Franklin, Tenn., artist who created this year's design, has painted scenes for more than 25 duck and conservation stamps and numerous prints for conservation organizations such as Quail Unlimited and Ducks Unlimited.

The wildlife commission began the waterfowl stamp and print program to raise funds for waterfowl conservation, including acquiring and improving habitat. Purchase of the stamp was voluntary until 1987 when it became mandatory for waterfowl hunters to buy them.

More than $2.4 million has been generated for the commission's waterfowl fund since inception of the program. The funds aided in purchase and habitat improvement of Conine Island in Bertie County, the Whitley and Whitaker tracts on the lower Roanoke River, Hunting Creek Swamp in Davie County and White Oak Impoundment in Onslow County.

Funds also have been and are being used on Goose Creek waterfowl impoundment management, in goose research and restoration and for equipment purchases. Money also goes toward meeting the goal of the North American Waterfowl Management program in restoring waterfowl populations in North America.

Stamps, which cost $5 each, are on sale at wildlife licensing agents. The stamp and print sets may be ordered from independent art dealers. Retail price for the stamp-print set is $141.
