

School Focuses On Safety

PHOTO CONTRIBUTED

Waccamaw volunteer firefighters 2nd Lt. Ronald Brady, Randy Mercer and Assistant Chief Kevin Smith talk with second and third grade students at Waccamaw School about fire safety. Sheriff's officers, including "Colonel," the drug investigation dog, and rescue volunteers also made presentations on school and home safety and parents received safety newsletters as part of the school's observance of National Safety Month.

Towns Get $832,400 For Potholes, Streets

Fifteen Brunswick County municipalities received a total of $832,400 in local street aid from the N.C. Department of Transportation last month.

DOT allocated $99.8 million statewide this year to towns and cities for use on city-maintained streets, 7.5 percent more money this year than the $92.2 million distributed last year.

In Brunswick County funding ranged from a low of $4,630 for Caswell Beach, based on 197 residents and less than one-fifth mile of non-state roads, to a high of $228,883 at nearby Long Beach, which had 4,380 residents and 85.16 miles of non-state maintained roads.

Funding allotments were based on 1993 statistics on estimated populations and miles of city-maintained streets.

The Powell Bill money comes from revenue generated by 1 1/4 cents per gallon of the state's gas tax and a supplemental appropriation from the state's Highway Trust Fund. The funds are distributed using a formula based on population and the number of miles of streets in the city that are not maintained by the state. Under that formula, set by the N.C. General Assembly, 75 percent of the funds are based on population while the number of street miles is used to calculate the remaining 25 percent. To qualify for Powell Bill money, a city or town must be actively engaged in the business of municipal government, with elected officials and a system of taxation.
