Corn Worm Damaging County Soy Bean Crop

Considerable damage is being found in the present soy bean crop in this county, according to J. Myron Maxwell, Extension official from N. C. State College, who with L. W. Anderson, County Agent, inspected several fields this week and discovered corn-ear worm present in large number.

The worm damages the crop, Mr. Maxwell said, by eating into the pod and then eating the beans. He advises all farmers of the county to inspect their crop of soy beans and if the crop is affected to cut the beans for hay, rather than lose it completely.
