Historic Treaty

History was written in Washington last Thursday when the United States Senate, by an overwhelming vote, approved the signing of the North Atlantic treaty, which now places this nation in alliance with a number of European powers for the purpose of common defense against wars. The approval of this treaty was a complete departure from the United States' foreign policy of foregoing entangling alliances in time of peace.

What the adoption of this historic treaty will lead to remains to be seen in the years to come. It may stop aggression but this we doubt, inasmuch as hundreds of treaties, signed by European nations, in centuries past have failed in this objective.

While the treaty is not a secret one, its terms were debated for hours in the Senate, the obligations now assumed by the United States remains somewhat obscure. We believe that only time and world conditions will provide the people of the United States with the full details that this treaty entails.

It does provide that in the event one signer of the treaty is attacked, the other signers shall come to the help of the victim, and take steps to halt the aggression. It also provides that the United States shall aid the other nations, allied through this treaty, by supplying arms to the member nations to aid in building up the defensive strength of the area.

Throughout history treaties, such as the North Atlantic Pact, have been made between families, tribes, and nations for common protection against aggression, some were successful for periods of time while others failed in their purposes. With the world growing smaller and smaller, through the advancement of transportation and science, it is the hope of peace loving people that this historic treaty may be the one that will provide security from aggression in the years ahead.

The Way To Prevent Another Depression

Speaker Sam Rayburn, of Texas, has doubts about the existence of a recession.

The Texan says that when 58,000,000 people are employed in industry and 30,000,000 farmers have money to buy what they need, he does not see how anybody can call it a "recession."

There is something to what Mr. Rayburn says. Undoubtedly, the nation will not go back to its pre-war level but, just the same, it will not maintain its economic level close to the top of the war-time boom.

While there are many economists who predict a serious depression for the United States, one should not overlook the difference between conditions today and those that existed after World War I. The Government continues to spend billions of dollars and the people of the nation have managed to set aside "something for a rainy day."

We do not think that a depression is impossible but we believe that it can be avoided. This will not be accomplished by penny-pinching economy or by tax reductions designed to persuade timid business men to go ahead with progressive programs. It centers around intelligent efforts to revive world trade and to create economic conditions that will boom international commerce higher than ever before.

Sunburn Can Be Fatal

The death of a twenty-four-year old man from sunburn is reported from another state and the tragedy should serve to warn all persons, and especially fair-skinned people, that it can be dangerous to expose one's self unduly to the rays of the sun.

It is not always the brightness of the sun that causes fatal burns. On slightly overcast days, the solar rays can filter through and be as powerful as the bright sunlight.

We do not know too much about the rays of the sun other than that they are extremely powerful. Some patients are exposed to the rays of the sun for treatment, especially tuberculosis victims, but it is safe to assume that if beneficial results can be secured, there is the possibility of harmful effects.

We do not go into the question of pigmentation, which explains why some people are easily sunburned and others are not. It is well for everybody to be temperate in exposure until well-tanned.

No School Planned For State Patrolmen

The State Highway Patrol plans no school for patrolmen during 1949, Col. C. R. (Tony) Tolar, commanding, said today.

Generally a patrol school is held each year to train men to replace patrolmen who have dropped out during the year. Col. Tolar said that the Patrol had had applications for re-instatement from a sufficient number of former members who had been in the armed services to bring the unit up to its authorized strength of 423 by September 1 without conducting a patrol school.

Col. Tolar added that his office had received numerous applications recently from young men in the State seeking to join the Patrol. He stated that these applications will be placed in the active file and when future vacancies occur in sufficient number to warrant a patrol school, these applicants will be given first consideration.

The Patrol is a unit of the Department of Motor Vehicles.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!
