A Poor Example

To our way of thinking the action of Col. C. R. Tolar, Commander of the North Carolina Highway Patrol, in disturbing a funeral near Chocowinity, and allegedly driving recklessly at the scene, set a poor example for the rest of the motorists of this State.

Col. Tolar has been indicted by a Beaufort County grand jury for the alleged violation of traffic laws but whether he is guilty of the charges is beside the point.

Holding the position he does Col. Tolar should be a shining example to the rest of the motoring public and should show by his actions, as well as speeches, that courtesy and careful driving are needed if the high accident rate of North Carolina is to be decreased.

We not only think, as Governor Scott is quoted "Tony made a mighty big mistake" but also that he was taking advantage of his high position and in all fairness to the people of North Carolina should suspend himself from his position as Commander of the Highway Patrol until he is cleared of the charges in Beaufort County.

Federal Police Not Desirable

The suggestion that a national police force be created to work on criminal cases now under the jurisdiction of state and local police is blasted by J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI.

Mr. Hoover notes the "old world" implications in the suggestion, which is "abhorrent" to him. He points out that the organization which he heads is an investigative body and a service agency for other law enforcement groups and that he wants it to stay that way.

Whenever the Government of the United States operates a police force, under orders from a central agency in Washington, the machinery would be available for any would-be dictator to stifle the liberties of the people of this country. For that reason, we certainly oppose anything like a national police force and prefer in its place the inevitable bungling that state and local police sometimes exhibit.

So long as the police forces of the nation are divided and under the control of state and local governments, there can be no concerted drive upon the liberties of the people of this country. There is danger enough today in the passage of numerous federal statutes, creating new crimes for the federal courts to punish. These carry with them the power of arrest by various federal officials. There is no need to widen the field of federal police authority or to set up a super-police force which could possibly serve as the basis for a police state.

Suspicion About Government

In announcing the taking of the seventeenth national census, President Truman assured the nation that no individual's privacy will be violated and that the data of the census would not be used as a weapon to increase taxation or in any way to affect the status of the individual with respect to his civil liberties.

Apparently, the President took cognizance of opposition to a provision for getting data on incomes. Under present plans, every tenth person will be asked to state his income. He called attention to the fact that the census is required by the constitution to make possible the apportionment of seats in the House of Representatives and that refusal to give information is punishable under Federal laws.

The existence of some opposition to certain questions in the census-taking offers evidence of a suspicion on the part of some people that the Government is not above using confidential statistics of the census for purposes not associated with the operation itself. This suspicion may be slight, at present, but it is an indication which responsible officials should not ignore.

It will be an unfortunate day for the United States, as a nation, if the people of this country begin to suspect that their government contemplates or practices the misuse of one function for the purpose of accomplishing something else. That there has developed a tendency, both in the legislative and executive branches, to obtain results by indirect, but forceful tactics, is apparent in the political sphere of action. Moreover, there is some suspicion that the judiciary itself is showing a trend in the same direction.

Money Now Plentiful For Loans To Vets

The Veterans Administration expects loan money for GI home loans to remain plentiful in most communities throughout the coming year. That is the prediction of T. B. King, director of the VA loan guaranty service, expressed in a statement to the 1950 annual convention of the National Association of Home Builders.

King pointed to the increasing supply of money for mortgage loan lending purposes, and noted that savings and loan associations alone had a net inflow of well over a billion dollars last year.

Several factors were cited in indicating that a large proportion of mortgage money will go into GI loans in the current year. First, the demand for investment money by U. S. business appears to be declining, according to this VA official, since the postwar capital expansion of manufacturing plants has passed its peak. At the same time, he pointed out, the yields on government and high-grade corporation bonds declined substantially during the past year, and this made such bonds less attractive as an investment for lending institutions.

A third factor cited is the purchase operations of the Federal National Mortgage Association, which support the GI loan program through re-purchase of mortgage loans.

Approximately 2,000,000 veterans of World War II have used their GI loan privileges up to this time. King estimated that nearly the same number will have obtained guaranteed and insured loans between this date and the end of the GI loan program seven years hence.

LOOKING AT WASHINGTON

country to another with a piece of litmus paper and see whether everything is true blue, whether the political, economic and social climate is exactly, in all its details, the kind that we would like to have."

The frank statement of the Secretary recognizes the gains that the Soviet Union has made throughout the world, without having to engage upon any military enterprise, and foresees the possibility of additional expansion for the Communists through that policy of boring from within. This method of attack cannot be thwarted by force but must be met by a flexible diplomacy which will effectively strengthen free peoples and thus eventually halt the expansion of Communism.
