Nasser Winning Gamble? Russia Backs Him Up—Kefauver Returns Favor—Truman: Gave Up?

Washington — Egyptian President-Dictator Gamel Nasser is very near to having won a bold gamble to steal the Suez Canal. Nasser, like Hitler before him, risked a war on the conviction that the democracies would not fight and apparently he was right.

The canal, most important international waterway in the world, was due to become Egyptian property in 1956. Nasser decided to take it twelve years early, after Britain followed the U. S. lead in bluntly refusing Nasser a loan to build a dam on the Nile River.

This was outright piracy on the national level and everyone involved recognized it for what it was. The British had just carried off their last soldiers from the Canal Zone in June. Thus Nasser waited only a month to take over after the soldiers left.

Russia, of course, was delighted with the theft. The Moscow radio beamed out support of the nationalization. Nasser acted like Hitler—just as the weekend approached and hurried conferences could not produce anything effective for the major powers concerned—England, the United States and France—until early the following week.

By the middle of the week following the seizure it appeared that the first idea, to send ships and men to the area, had been abandoned. Britain suffered what was a heavy prestige defeat in the Middle East. The United States, in a presidential year, could not get involved in any fighting.

Yet Nasser was very weak. He had Israel on his hands at the time of the seizure of the canal and the Israelis would have liked nothing better than to see him become involved in military operations in the Canal Zone. Moreover, Israeli military forces would probably have willingly joined in an operation to restore the canal to its former basis.

But the major democracies hesitated, talked, protested. It was like the thirties all over again.

Senator Estes Kefauver, in swinging his support to Adlai Stevenson is returning a few past "favors" from Averell Harriman. He also is bidding to get himself in line for one of several things. If Stevenson wins, he could expect an important appointment.

He might get into serious contention for the second place nomination, should Stevenson win at Chicago—and there are reports that Kefauver could have swung his weight to Harriman, but was promised attention.

Kefauver must have remembered the bitter cup he drank at Chicago, in 1952, as a result of the attitude Harry Truman and then Averell Harriman. When Kefauver led the field in delegate votes, at the 1952 convention, he proposed to Harriman that the New Yorker support him, in return for second place on the ticket.

Harriman wasn't interested and that ended Kefauver's chances. He had no where else to turn. The Senator's supporters felt that Harriman should have favored Kefauver's candidacy, since it was highly popular in New York. Now that Truman appears to have helped Harriman a bit, Kefauver has returned their 1952 compliments with a blow that just about clinches things for Adlai.

It's also said that Harry Truman came to the conclusion that Harriman could not win the nomination just prior to Kefauver's announcement. Therefore, the Kefauver bolt came just as Truman may have been reevaluating his flirtation with Harriman—though HST always maintained on the surface that he had no choice.

This didn't seem to jive with his call for a fighting candidate and close relations with Harriman earlier in the year. Harriman was generally considered a fighting candidate, though many people thought he was fighting for the wrong things. Stevenson was considered the moderate, as is President Eisenhower in the Republican Party.
