We are fighting to preserve our Constitutional and legal systems against the erosive action of some impatient groups. This is the basis for my argument against these harsh bills. Laws On The Books. In my Senate speech on February 16, I pointed out that there are existing remedies under Federal law for voting rights cases. There is a criminal remedy of Washington — The United States Senate debate has been successful in documenting that Southern opposition is based on harsh proposals that go far beyond a simple voting rights bill. At the outset, the people were told that the bills dealt mainly with voting rights. It has been our duty to point out the contents of these so-called civil rights proposals. That we have done and are continuing to do inasmuch as there are around undoubted constitutionality, and there are also available two civil statutes under which any individual who is wrongfully denied his right to vote can sue the State election official who commits the wrong and can recover damages if the deprivation is merely threatened. Any person allegedly aggrieved can either recover damages or can obtain what we call preventive relief. One of these statutes is Title 42, Section 38, of the United States Code. The other is embodied in Title 42, Section 1988 of the United States Code. This last statute says, in effect, that if the procedures for the vindication of civil rights established by the laws of the United States are not sufficient then the party can have the benefit, even in the Federal court, of any State remedies which are available for that purpose.

These two statutes give any private individual who is allegedly deprived of any civil rights, including the right to vote, a right to bring a civil action either to prevent the wrong from being committed to him or to obtain damages for its commission.

clear in the last fifty years that Christians must meet together as Christians and speak to the civil authorities as to what the issues are as seen by Christians. Churchmen will not find in the Scriptures or in their own deliberations detailed programs to resolve the difficult questions that secular authorities must face, especially today. Christian people, however, have a right and a responsibility to consult each other and then to speak out on all or any issue where they feel something must be said. Even if they disagree with the civil authorities, the word must still be said!

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

We must ever bear in mind that Christians in many lands confront "Caesars" — autocratic military leaders — who are bitterly antagonistic to the church. We are not realistic if we forget that in history "Caesars" have often been enemies of the church. In our time, they may become more dangerous enemies than in the past.

These comments are based on outlines of the International Sunday School Lesson, copyrighted by the International Council of Religious Education, and used by permission.
