Russia And Cuba

The Russian threat to bombard the United States with rockets, if any move is made against Fidel Castro in Cuba, is the most threatening and insulting challenge to United States power which has occurred in the history of the country.

It is hard to see how such insulting threats can be allowed to achieve their purpose—that is, an inactive reply by the United States to the direct communist threat in Cuba. Indeed, the very threats themselves make it clear that a dangerous situation has developed, which threatens the United States and the Western Hemisphere, and that the Castro government must be removed from office.

Since it is now obvious that this revolution was accomplished with communist aid, it is justifiable for the United States to use every means of undercover aid to Castro opponents to overthrow the government. An economic blockade, which has been suggested, would be the first and best step to initiate the squeeze on Cuba. The Russians will attempt to ignore this blockade, but the United States could give ample warnings and could, if necessary, confiscate ships and force them to discharge their cargoes elsewhere. If necessary, Russian losses could be made good from the financial standpoint.

The threat of Khrushchev brings up the possibility that Soviet rockets may some day be stationed in Cuba, and before the situation comes to this the United States had better move—with its South American neighbors—to oust the Castro government, preferably by revolution.

Rights And Responsibility

In the Republic of the Congo, a country which was only recently created in Africa, things have gone from bad to worse.

The Republic, which gained its independence only July 1st is a living example of the futility in granting rights and responsibilities to people before they are ready to assume them with responsibility and intelligence

Here we have an example of a European power turning over independence to a native mass, and immediate mutiny and turmoil—and even revolt—resulting.

The communist propaganda line concerning the exploitation of native peoples by capitalism has sometimes prompted the Western democracies to make premature moves in an effort to exhibit our democratic conscience to the world. The United States was eager and too quick to recognize Fidel Castro and we exhibited a sense of political naivety in this case.

In the case of the Republic of the Congo, the Belgian Government was probably wrong in assuming that the natives were ready to establish a democracy and demonstrate the responsibility which is required to make a democracy work.

People can be given too much freedom, and too much responsibility before they are ready for the intelligent exercise of the powers and rights granted them.

And sometimes it is better for a race which has demonstrated the field of democratic government leadership and achievement in ment to lead and supervise backward peoples—rather than to grant them immediate independence before inhabitants are capable of exercising, cherishing and protecting it.

Sunday School Lesson

THE SEEDS OF NATIONAL DECAY

International Sunday School Lesson for July 31, 1960.

Memory Selection: "Sow for yourselves righteousness, reap the fruit of steadfast love; break up your fallow ground, for it is the time to seek the Lord, that he may come and rain salvation upon you." (Hosea 10:12).

Lesson Text: Hosea 8:1-5; 10:1-12; 13:1-3.

Pursuing our study on "God's Justice and Mercy," today adults will want to consider the very pertinent question: What signs of decay are apparent in the life of our communities and our nation?

Reading our Biblical text for today, we see that as the nation prospered, the Israelites turned more and more to idolatry. And few men in Israel's history ever unleashed so stinging an attack on idolatry as did Hosea. Speaking for God, he tried to shake the people loose from their proud, unworthy leadership. Hosea believed that God should have a hand in deciding the leadership of his people, as in the days of Moses. So formidable were the crimes against God, so ridden was the nation with occurrences that a holy God hated and despised, and so in league was the priesthood with the corrupt politics, that Hosea directed his appeal and plea to the body politic, perhaps hoping for a major revolution to alter the disaster-laden course which the nation was so blissfully pursuing. Today does the concern exhibited by Hosea have pertinence for us?

The bright side of the world's history is the story of hard-won victories in favor of the dignity of man. It always turns out that the elevation of man's condition comes about because someone cared enough to champion a particular cause. Florence Nightingale, braced against her family's opposition and her friends' scorn, carried her knowledge of medicine to the bloody Crimean battlefields. Today the nursing profession puts her name high in the list of honored women. Jane Addams, pitting her sympathies against the depressing slums of Chicago, gained world acclaim by making Hull House an experiment in human understanding. Wilberforce, inspired by Wesley, lifted his voice year after year in the halls of Parliament to rid the British Empire of the scourge of slavery. Woodrow Wilson, pleading the case of the oppressed nations of the world, burned himself out in behalf of the League of Nations. He lost America's support, but that ill-fated enterprise became the seed that gave rise to the creation of the United Nations.

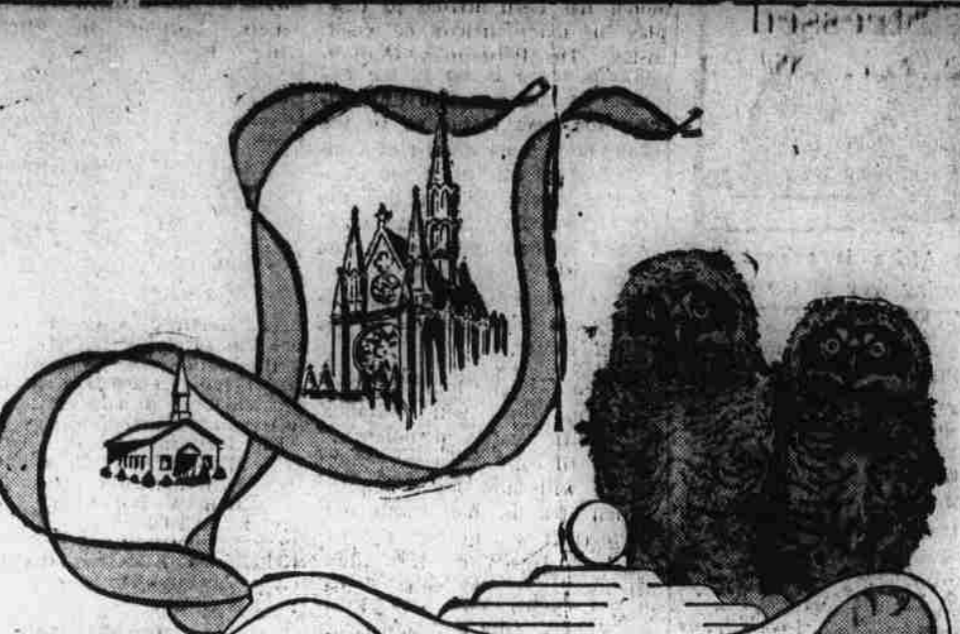

Deep in the spirit of these lives and others like them, we find trust in God and a dogged confidence in the worth of man. The champions of human values are persons who, like Hosea, see human frailty for what it is. But they do not stop there. They see God ready and eager to release forgiveness and inspire obedience.

In another realm of world need we have our champions—those who believe in the inviolability of the moral law. Fortunately in every generation there emerge men of keen moral sensitivity. Most often they are called idealists as they seek to bolster moral principles in a slow-to-change society controlled for the most part by unprincipled men.

If there is to be a new world we will have to work with God to bring it to life. Why? Because any world worth having will have to be the kind in which the bounty of God is acknowledged and in which the demands God lays upon the human spirit will be respected.

On still yet another score we find that we need the impact of the personality that has moral grasp. The discoveries coming out of the laboratories of the nuclear physicists compel the acceleration of ethical control. We are reminded of the story of the old sculptor who was carving a figure that was to be placed in a niche in a wall. Its back would never be seen. Yet the master artisan worked with great diligence on the entire statue. When asked why he spent so much time and talent on the back of the figure when it would never be seen, the old man replied with great dignity: "God will always be looking upon it."

There is something wrong with

Wisdom

One of our old teachers used to say, "I can lead you to knowledge, but only God can give you wisdom."

And how right he was. A string of diplomas and degrees does not make a man wise. Many of the wisest never had a formal education.

For knowledge is the accumulation of facts. But wisdom is the ability to apply a few facts—perhaps only one—to a life-situation.

We know a distinguished scholar who has written volumes on ecclesiastical architecture. And we know an elderly widow who told her grandchildren, "Churches ain't made to look at!"

And the scholar—earnest Christian that he is—humbly bows to the wisdom of the widow!

For whether it be a cathedral or chapel, the Church cannot enrich our lives until reverently we enter its portals to worship and serve God. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.

THE CHURCH FOR ALL... ALL FOR THE CHURCH

The Church is the greatest factor in our life for the building of character and good citizenship. It is a storehouse of spiritual values. Without a strong Church, neither democracy nor civilization can survive. There are four sound reasons why every person should attend services regularly and support the Church. They are: (1) For his own sake. (2) For his children's sake. (3) For the sake of his community and nation. (4) For the sake of the Church itself, which needs his moral and material support. Plan to go to church regularly and read your Bible daily.
