Veterans Day November 11th

Veterans Day, Wednesday, November 11, has been declared a day to observe "Peace With Honor". Join in your local Veterans Day observance of the courage and dedication of those who gave so much to keep our country free. Today we honor the men and women who have worn the uniform of their country and who do so at this moment. We have set aside one day of the year, Veterans Day, so that all Americans can pause in their daily living to say "thank you" to those who have fought and died for our freedom. Today is that day, Veterans Day, 1970.

Veterans differ from other Americans only because at one time in their lives they wore the uniform of their country in its time of need. They live all about us - nearly 28 million of them - as policemen, teachers, doctors, nurses, judges, congressmen, senators and even presidents. All know the full meaning of America and freedom. Veterans are truly peacemakers. They fought against those trying to destroy it - from Jamestown and Yorktown in the Revolutionary war - to Vietnam today. Wars are not popular, nor do those who fight them want to die or become injured. They do so because their country calls them to duty and they have the courage and the love for their country that compels them to respond. Freedom has a price tag on it. All Americans must help pay that price in one way or another. Strong and courageous Americans pay it by wearing the uniform of their country. Those of us who stay at home pay in sacrificing some of the comforts and conveniences of life. Those of us who are not called to service can help in other ways. We can try to understand the reasons why we must defend freedom and insist on peace. We can pledge our support for those on the battlefield, whether we agree or not on the reasons why they are there. We can make known our objections, if we express them in a peaceful manner. We must as Americans be careful how we weigh the claims in other lands about how much better their forms of government are than our own. Some nations boast of more freedom and equality for their people, but wind up building a wall of brick, stone and barbed wire to keep their people from fleeing. Veterans who truly understand freedom, love their country. They have seen others where freedom has been stamped out and they have come home filled with pride because of what

Original Air Force Art To Be Exhibited

A unique and fascinating view of Air Force life as seen through the eyes of some of America's foremost artists and illustrators will be available to visitors to the United States Air Force Art Exhibit at Southgate Mall, Elizabeth City, Nov. 6-11. Often described as "intriguing" and "pleasantly different" by both art critics and viewers, the exhibit is a selection of some 40 paintings from the more than 3,000 in the official Air Force Art Collection.

Paintings in this exhibition depict a panorama of Air Force activities; the launch of a Minuteman missile, ground crews waiting for their pilot to return from a combat mission, a giant jet transport taking aboard wounded soldiers, the portrait of a famous general. The USAF Art Collection documents the story of the Air Force through the universal language of art. Paintings in the collection record the history and development of the Air Force from the first aerial combats of World War I through the modern age of supersonic jets and space flight. But the collection does more than provide a historical perspective. It is also a "now" look at the Air Force and the people who make it what it is today.

Lack Of Support Could Hamper Cancer Research

These logotype proofs are designed for reproduction purposes and to help illustrate stories and advertisements presenting the message of the American Cancer Society's Crusade. They can be used as newspaper or magazine ads without additional text, as drop-ins in regular newspaper or magazine advertisements, or with sales literature, letterheads, billboards, handbills, theatre programs, menus and other forms of commercial printing. The logotypes are also available in mats and electros. Order by number from your local American Cancer Society.

"The rising expectation in cancer research could be hampered by lack of support. We aren't going to let that happen!" Mrs. Carol Harrell, chairman of the American Cancer Society's Oct. 1970 Crusade in Perquimans County explained, "This is a crisis situation. The Federal Government is holding the line on its research support. The American Cancer Society is being deluged with grant requests, worthwhile research that can't be pursued because of lack of funds. Each year the cost of research in progress rises by more than eight percent, the way the cost of living increases. That means we must raise at least that much more money just to keep going." The American Cancer Society has allocated more than $200 million to cancer research since 1947. Grants are made to individual research projects; institutes, universities and hospitals doing pilot studies and providing opportunities for young investigators; outstanding scientists and students specializing or planning to specialize in cancer research. "We cannot afford to lose these people to other areas. They need a stable base of support to continue," she said. The questions research must answer are many. Here are just a few: "What is the relationship between viruses and human cancer?" "How can the body's immunization mechanism be triggered to fight cancer?" "What can be done to overcome resistance which cancer cells build up against the drugs developed at such cost and effort? High on the priority list is the search for a final solution to leukemia. Leukemia is cancer of the blood-forming tissue. Tremendous progress has been made through research. A whole new branch of cancer treatment - chemotherapy - emerged in the last two decades. Today, the lives of leukemia patients are being extended, but there is no cure. The American Cancer Society invests more than $1,250,000 annually just in leukemia-related research. "Research has already produced the cures for several types of cancer, and has led to modern treatment measures. Research has shown that some cancers can be prevented. Research has to go ahead and that means the support of people in Perquimans County," the chairman said.
