Vaccination Program To Protect Horses

A vaccination program to protect horses from the killer disease Venezuelan Equine Encephalomyelitis (VEE) will be initiated in North Carolina in the next few weeks.

The vaccine, TC-38, has been used only in Texas and the surrounding quarantine area on an experimental basis. Recently it has been approved and certified safe by the USDA.

According to North Carolina Commissioner of Agriculture James A. Graham, a delegation from the N.C. Agriculture Department met in Washington, D.C. with USDA officials who agreed to begin the vaccination program in North Carolina as soon as possible.

The delegation was comprised of Assistant Commissioner John Reitzel, State Veterinarian Dr. T.F. Zweigart and Dr. W.W. Harkins, federal veterinarian in charge of the Animal Health Division of ARS, USDA in North Carolina.

"The USDA's approval for a vaccination program for North Carolina is wonderful news to me, our horse owners and all our people," Graham said. "Scientists tell us VEE can do well in this climate and unless checked could spread as far north as Canada."

"The vaccination program is mandatory for all horses and equine stock if the animals are to be moved from the owner's premises. They can be moved, of course, to the designated places of vaccination," he continued. "The NCDA will announce the time and place of vaccination in the near future."

The program will be coordinated jointly by the NCDA, the USDA and the N.C. Board of

Social Security Offers "Teleservice"

Social security beneficiaries periodically receive notices that require assistance from the social security office. The majority of these contacts can be handled by telephone.

A recent study indicated that many of the beneficiaries in the Perquimans area lack means of transportation and must rely on friends, bus, or taxi for traveling. This creates a burden on the person, not to mention the added expense for bus or taxi fare. Although there are some matters that cannot be completed by phone, these are very few and a phone call in most instances is sufficient.

Social security beneficiaries are not the only ones who can do their business by using the telephone. Anyone planning to file for social security benefits should also phone the local Social Security office for assistance.

Favorable reaction from the public to this emphasis on "teleservice" has been overwhelming. Before your next visit to the Social Security office, call first—you may not need to go.
