

A TOUCH OF COUNTRY—Passing tourists on U.S. 17 may stop to view this relic of country life now sporting a mailbox. Mrs. James Pierce has added a flower bed with a black wrought iron pot containing greenery.

STATE BIRD AND FLOWER—The Ned Nixons had a refreshing idea when they decorated their mailbox with decals of the cardinal on branches of dogwood.

FROM PAST TO PRESENT—On cold winter mornings of years long past, a family member would go outside to pump the water needed for breakfast. I doubt that they thought this necessary item would end up supporting a mailbox, but as shown here it does so nicely for E.R. Stallings.

DOUBLE DUTY—This large mailbox belonging to the J.P. Elliott family of Rt. 4, Hertford serves a two-fold purpose. Connected is the box for the newspaper.

About Your Mailbox...

If you can get the gas, a journey down the country roads of the county can prove most interesting. Recently, just such a trip resulted in locating many unique and unusual mailboxes.

Taking a little time, a few materials, and a lot of imagination, many county residents turned their mailboxes into eye-catching attractions.

The old hand pump from the farm seemed to be the most popular, while the addiction of various decals is also catching on. Some have used different letter styles to obtain the desired effect. Others added unusual posts.

As the dedicated mailmen make their rounds through "snow, and rain, and heat and gloom of night," the decorative mailboxes make things a little brighter.

CORRECTION

The ad in last week's Perquimans Weekly concerning rabies vaccinations which began NOTICE TO DOG OWNERS contained an error. The ad read that W. Ray White, county dog warden-rabies inspector, would be administering rabies vaccinations at the Health Department on Mon. May 1. It should have read Wed. May 1.

Be sure to check future editions of the Perquimans Weekly for the complete vaccination schedule.

DINNER GUESTS

Mr. and Mrs. William B. Amis and Julian Brinkley of Plymouth were dinner guests of Miss Elizabeth Tucker and Miss Virginia Tucker on Wednesday night.
