Injuries from Bunk Beds have resulted in hospital emergency room treatment, and that a percentage of injuries were serious enough to result in hospitalization. The National Electronic Injury Surveillance System released the following sampling ending Dec. 31, 1975: 657 bunk bed associated injuries treated in hospital emergency rooms. Lacerations accounted for 35 percent of the injuries, which occurred mostly to the head and face. Contusions and abrasions were the next most common diagnosis, representing 30 percent of the total. Fractures, mostly of the arm and hand, made up 16 percent of the injuries. Strains and sprains accounted for 8 percent, and were mostly of the leg and foot. Hematoma and concussion together represented 4 percent of bunk bed injuries. Other injuries accounted for the remaining 7 percent. Notably, bunk beds are common problem such as summer camps, in college dorms, and in children's bedrooms.

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission reminds adults and children to use care around swimming pools and related equipment. An estimated 56,000 persons required hospital emergency room treatment for injuries associated with swimming pools, pool slides, and diving boards, last year. The Commission offers these tips: Use non-slip materials on deck surrounding pool and on diving boards and ladders; Have the electrical systems installed by licensed electricians and in accordance with recognized standards for safety; Fence in your pool area to prevent access to unsupervised children; Place a safety float line where the bottom slope begins to deepen; Keep all electrical appliances, such as radios, away from pool because of potential shock hazard which they present; Learn to swim well! Write for Fact Sheet No. 8 Swimming Pools, U.S. Consumer Safety Commission, Washington, D.C. 20207. Or, call toll free HOTLINE at 800-638-2666.
