Coming up with gifts during the holidays can be a source of stress for many people, especially if there isn't the money to buy what we'd really like.

One way to alleviate some of this stress is to keep in mind that gifts don't have to be purchased. And they don't always have to be new. In fact, the best gift for someone may be something handmade or something that's been around for a while.

For example, you may have some old photographs that can be put together in a little booklet of memories.

Or, there may be some object in your house that someone special has always admired. So, give it as a gift.

Or, it may be that you have a skill or talent you could share with some one over the coming year. Say you're good at mending clothes. Then, you could promise to do several different mending projects for a special person.

Or, if you enjoy putting around the house, you may promise a day or two of fixing at another person's house that they would really appreciate.

If you have a car and someone else doesn't, you could wrap up a set of coupons promising so many free rides around town.

Our feelings about the gifts — that we are giving a part of ourselves — are often more important to us than the size or the cost of the gift. A gift sincerely and carefully chosen — from new or old items — will be special.

There aren't many gifts that offer a lifetime guarantee. But there are some presents that can help a person grow — and, in that sense, they last a lifetime.

So before you rush out and buy a special present for someone in your family, give your selection some thought.

Has someone in your family talked about learning to paint? Then give that budding artist a box of acrylics and a simple instruction book.

After all, when the supplies are handy — there will be no excuse for not getting started.

In addition, there are some gifts that can help broaden a person's viewpoint. These include books, magazine subscriptions, records, or maybe a season ticket to a nearby dinner theater.

And it's even better when a gift lets the receiver use his own imagination. Just give a seamstress a few yards of fabric — and watch her create. Or give a would-be chef an unusual cookbook — and be prepared to sample some interesting new dishes.

No doubt about it. Presents that help a person grow are valuable gifts — whether the recipient is a child or the oldest family member.

Tablets stop motion sickness

Travel can have a devastating effect upon holiday fun when motion sickness raises its nauseous head. Prevention's the best remedy. Motion sickness is more easily prevented with medication and good sense than when treated once discomfort starts. Regardless of your travel mode, get plenty of rest before embarking, skip alcoholic drinks, avoid watching the horizon and ride wherever motion is less severe. Ask your pharmacist to suggest special tablets to keep motion sickness from crashing in uninvited on your travel days. Wishing you health for the holidays — As always!
