BACKUP WITHHOLDING (New Form W-9)

You may have thought the issue of withholding on interest and dividends died when the 10% withholding provision was repealed in 1983. However, at the time that provision was repealed, a new provision called "backup withholding" was instituted.

Any individual who does not provide his correct social security number to a payor of interest, dividends, and "other reportable payments" may be subject to a $50 penalty and to backup withholding starting January 1, 1984. Backup withholding will also be required for individuals whom the IRS identifies as having underreported interest and dividend income.

Backup withholding will be done by the payor of such income at the rate of 20%. It applies not only to interest and dividends but also to other payments such as rent, royalties, commissions, non-employee compensation, and other reportable payments.

You will be receiving identification number verification requests (Form W-9) from such payors. These requests should be read carefully and the instructions followed, or you may find yourself subject to backup withholding and a $50 penalty.

Backup withholding is not an additional tax. Rather, the tax liability of persons subject to backup withholding will be reduced by the amount of the tax withheld. If withholding results in an overpayment of taxes, a refund may be obtained.

Payors who must withhold the tax are to report and deposit it in the same way that they handle withheld payroll taxes.

In general, only those payments that are considered "reportable payments" are subject to the backup withholding rules; that is, annual interest and dividend payments of less than $10 or other payments of less than $600 are not subject to these rules.
