CONTRAINDICATIONS FOR CONTACTS

Contact lenses are great. For most people they are the ideal answer to correcting refractive errors. However, they are not for everyone. Some people are squeamish about wearing contact lenses. Others are careless about taking care of them. Others cannot wear them because of their jobs. Anyone exposed to chemical fumes, vapors, intense heat, molten metals, or high dust levels should not wear contact lenses, at least not while they're working.

Hay fever sufferers may have to stop wearing contact lenses during hay fever season, or go on a reduced schedule. On the other hand, some lens wearers point out that they feel less irritation because contacts are a deterrent to rubbing the eyes to relieve the itching. Any active infection of the eye and the surrounding tissues is a contraindication to wearing contact lenses. If you suffer from chronic or recurring eye infections, contact lenses are not for you. The same is true for people who have unusually "dry eyes."
