4-Hers learn ATV riding skills

The North Carolina Motorcycle Dealers Association and the North Carolina Department of Agriculture are working jointly to promote a 5-day ATVenture Camp which will educate youths about the safe operation of all terrain vehicles. The camp, which runs from August 2-6, 1987, is open to North Carolina youth ages 10 to 16, and membership in 4-H is not required. Participants must provide their own vehicles and riding gear.

The objectives of the camp are to improve riding skills, to increase knowledge of how the ATV operates and how to minimize its effect upon the environment. Participants will be involved in an intense hands-on training program covering the safe operation of an ATV, principles of small engine operation and maintenance, safe riding skills, responsibility to others' property and the environment, and alternative uses of ATVs. Safety will be emphasized continuously.

"Recently there has been much adverse publicity regarding all terrain vehicles in the popular news media. It's important that the general public realizes that the general public realizes that the greatest contribution we can make to safety with these vehicles is to educate the riders," says John McCorquodale, coordinator of the project for the association. "The NCMDA is taking this opportunity to assist the NCDA in establishing what we hope will become a regular event for young riders who are interested in learning about the safe operation of all terrain vehicles."

The cost for the camp is $80.00, and the deadline for registration for the camp is July 17. Those interested in attending the camp should contact Robert L. McLymore, Extension Safety specialist, Box 7625, NCSU, Raleigh, NC 27695-7625.
